

So Far as his Friends See He Has Two Totally Distinct Lines, One Official, the Other Private.

"I have," said Mr. Chamberlain in his famous Leicester speech, "almost as many friends in the United States as I have here." And the interest taken in Mr. Chamberlain's sayings and doings are not confined to his friends on the globe only. Certainly five days out of six it would be difficult to pick up a newspaper on either side without finding in it an allusion, more or less remote, to something Mr. Chamberlain has said or done, or not said or not done. He has probably supplied more "copy" than any other living Englishman, and supplied it more continuously.

Lord Derby once remarked that Mr. Chamberlain—who at the moment (1877-8) was not very prominently before the public—reminded him of the American politician, of whom it was said: "He's a beat, but he ain't going to stay beat!" One sometimes reflects how dull the newspapers would be without Mr. Chamberlain's speeches, but it is safer to say how low the level of the newspapers and the opinion-makers generally would be if it were not for the excellent opportunity Mr. Chamberlain affords them at proper intervals of "going for" him and his policy.

But it is not only his policy that interests the public, it is his personality. So far as they see, he lives two totally distinct lives, the one official, about which they think they know everything; the other private, about which they know almost nothing. And this is Mr. Chamberlain's dilemma. He has the greatest dislike to the publicity of the private life, a dislike which is shared by his family. Mrs. Chamberlain does not chronicle in the press and there are some people who are not aware that he has a second son.

The Colonial Secretary has two homes—Highbury, near Birmingham, and 40 Prince's Gardens, Hyde Park, Highbury. He built in 1881. Until then he lived in Edgmont, close to his friend and parliamentary colleague, Mr. George Wyndham. Highbury was, of course, named after his old home in London. It is characteristic of Mr. Chamberlain that he should purchase one of the fine seats of the Midlands. But he preferred to remain among his friends and relatives, close to Mrs. Green Hall, where his parents lived, now occupied by his brother, Mr. Arthur Chamberlain.

In the early days, when he first took cabinet rank, the workmen of the Birmingham and London Railway, who were building the line between the two cities, were at work on the line. One day, when Mr. Chamberlain was in the train, he saw a workman who was building the line. He was a man of a certain age, with a white beard and a white hair. He was a man of a certain age, with a white beard and a white hair. He was a man of a certain age, with a white beard and a white hair.

He was not disturbed by their criticisms. The power to see the joke against one's self, and to turn it against one's opponent, is a valuable asset in public life. Mr. Chamberlain was the eldest of a large family—possibly the largest in the country—and he was a man of a certain age, with a white beard and a white hair.

WHISKERS CAUSE STRIKE.

New York Cabbies Do Not Want to Be Shaved.

New York, Nov. 27.—Demanding the recognition of their rights as free born American citizens to wield the whip if they so elect, with faces drawn in such an array of furious contortions as nature and art make possible, 350 cabmen, employed by the stables that control the stands at five of the biggest hotels and restaurants of the city, went on a strike yesterday.

Ever since the Jameson raid the exact nature of the relations between Mr. Chamberlain and the late Mr. Rhodes have been a source of unending speculation. Whether their union was one of affinity or of necessity will perhaps never be known. But people in the South African House, Cape Town, and in the House of Commons, have held to the latter view, and say that Mr. Rhodes never ceased to hate Mr. Chamberlain for his conduct after the raid.

While other members of parliament were in the House, the member for Birmingham always wears a frock coat and bowler hat, the member for London always wears a frock coat and bowler hat, the member for London always wears a frock coat and bowler hat.
