This method has also been used by manufacturers who are supposed to be independent and work for the good of the independent felephony, but which are controlley by the Bell Company. That is, where the people have determined to put in an exchange and such companies think they cannot secure the control at a high ligure, they try to circulate the impression that the plant can be instaled at considerably less than it costs to put in a particular state of the citizens would and the whole of the citizens would and the whole of the citizens would and the whole of the citizens would senser.

He did not mind public utility services being owned publicly, but the telephones only served a few but the telephones only served a lew and were not a proper subject for ownership. He admitted that the Bell Company was ungenerous to its subscribers, and evinced no give-an-take policy, but hoped the Bell Company would meet the Independent proposition.

usually benevolent method of acceding to the wishes of the prospective purchasers has done more to arouse doubts in the minds of thinking citizens than letters from outside and possibly interested or irresponsible parties. The promoters also tendered a free trip to Rochester to members of the telephone committee, and it was at first arranged that Aid. Leitch. Corey and Westwood were to go, but after due consideration Aid. Leitch received more light and concluded not to go, and the party was called off. Nor has the Bell Telephone Company interfered or shown any outward interest in the tenders of the independent companies. Mr. Scott has re-Cheap Phones for Workmen.

Lloyd Harris, who prefers Brantford to Paris, London or Toronto, and can do business in his favorite city by means of the long distance phone, had only returned after a four months' bustness tour and was not familiar with the situation, but promised The World an interview later when he had had time to look into it. Eleven years' residence in different parts of Europe has broadened this splendid young Canadian into the finest type of the coming generation of public men. Public ownership of public utilities is such an axiom in Europe that Mr. Harris has no doubt about public utilities is such an axiom in Europe that Mr. Harris has no doubt about its application to Canada. He is familiar with Glasgow, where two of his best friends, members of the city council, and two of the keenest business men of the city, are enthusiastic municipal traders. We are enthusiastic municipal traders. that a ten million dollar company is being organized by a Toronto promoter, cipal traders. Mr. Harris believes in the United States capital being largely interested, and that the offer to be made by this concern will eclipse anything so far mentioned in respect both of efficients.

by this concern will eclipse anything of far mentioned in respect both of efficiency and terms.

It is undoubted that there is a strong feeling among some citizens, and not a few of the labor leaders, that the offer of an independent company should be accepted. The telephone service, it is argued, is not one that affects all the citizens, and it would be desirable not to make it a possible risk of any kind to the city and thus leave the corporation free to deal with the lighting question, the public ownership of which the labor party is committed to, and of which all the citizens, in view of the success of the waterworks, highly approve.

Way and Sweden and Denmark. In these countries every cottage nearly has a telephone, and they are looked upon as necessities by all. The charge must not be more than ten dollars a year, as he never called in any little country cottage that there was not a telephone installed. He believed that in Brantford the workmen would take eagerly to a telephone service which would not cost more than 25 cents a week. It would be a great convenience to them in communication with the factories, and to their wives in bad weather of the race known as Pennsylvania prove.

If they wished to pay less they must reduce their rates accordingly. The rental would benefit the whole city, and not the telephone users only. Mr. Heyd the telephone users only.
