BY LILLIAN M. SCOTT.

IN EVERY fashionable gathering the observant one will notice that there In EVERY fashionable gathering the observant one will notice that there are a few women, perhaps only one or two, who stand out because of the quiet smartness of their appearance. At a luncheon, matinee, club or reception one is attracted to the woman of reserve, and not infrequently the object of one's attention is 'attired in a gown or tailleur of unobtrusive color and design, and so, because this is a season of gorgeous hue, and the woman who is quietly garbed is rather in contrast with her surroundings. Therefore, the most admired costume noticed this sombre Easter morn was of simplest description—an extremely smart model of dark blue with moderately short skirt. Completing the toilette was a hat of black horse hair straw with cascade of uncurled ostrich feathers and a carefully

At morning service many suits, capes and fur coats made their appearance. Lovely flowers and foliage threw faint shadows across the chancel, while now and then the sun tried to shine somewhat feebly thru the variwhile how and then the sun tried to shine somewhat feebly thru the vari-colored leaded windows. Long before the choir made its appearance the church was filled with a fashionable crowd—women mostly with suppressed expressions of curiosity upon their Sunday features. Among the men few top hats were noted.

But, since church is not the place where one may study the trend of the mode successfully, even on Easter, we lowered our eyes as we followed the service, after which we hied us home to dinner, from whence we motored to the most likely spot in Toronto where one may observe what is what on a Sunday afternoon—the lake shore promenade! Here youthful Toronto in all her spring glory was hugely represented. And tho the breeze was of sufficient strength to coax up more than one masculine breeze was of sufficient strength to coax up more than one masculine collar, feminine necks were much in evidence, to say nothing of several Despite the weather, also the fact that the shops are showing many

Despite the weather, also the fact that the shops are showing many small models, the large brimmed hat seemed most favored.

Our eyes followed a young girl, slight of figure, as she walked with erect dignity against the wind. Her suit, a blue serge jacket and bolero, was severely elegant. She wore a high crowned, rolled brimmed hat of flat straw braid, with a glycerine plume poised gracefully at one side.

The vogue of the vest is really astonishing since it was worn so much last spring, summer and fall. This season it again enhances the smartest

Particularly striking was a suit of earth-colored Kasha, with a wired collar boned under the ears. The platted skirt was short. With this costume was worn a hat of brown silk, over which was draped a wisp of lace

As for the men! But one does not look for correct masculine attire on a promenade, but rather, perforce, one looks to exclusive clubs or motor tion and directed our gaze toward the road, and we might say that we became really interested in what the men were wearing when we regarded the variety and excellent taste shown in new cravats, scarfs and hats, weight cheviot. One particularly good looking coat, worn by a local business man prominent in the motor world, was of fawn-colored camel's fleece, There is far more artistry in the some

There is far more artistry in the new coats for spring than heretofore. Motor coats should be tailored with skill to ensure comfort and smartness. The tight-waisted model with flaring skirt, of other years, is almost obsolete, which is, of course, as it should be. To motor in pleasure one must be comfortably garbed.

And so, our swift glances, the not always appraising, followed the crowd, and as hasty conclusions oft' times prove disastrous, we shall leave the verdict of our first impressions of the spring display of apparel and tempting accessories to that time when weather conditions make it possible to have to more perfect and complete ensemble.

EASTER'S MESSAGE APPEAL TO NEW LIFE

Rev. Dr. Ribourg, preaching at Saint Alban's Cathedral Easter evening, on "Christ's Resurrection and the World's Resurrection." said, in part: Easter is to Christians a day of riumph, a season of holy joy, because t speaks to man of the continuity of ife after the dissolution of the earthly frame, and because it symbolizes mankind constantly arising from its ashes to a more perfect state.

Truth fettered and crucified is forever rising from the tomb, leading humanity to new discoveries and new ventures. Freedom crushed and buried forever revives to inspire man to secure the moral independence which is the due reward of a life founded on character and self-respect. Justice outraged and defeated forever triumphs, and, like a perennial stream, at once quenches men's evil passions, and refreshes the hopes of the oppressed.

Man is constantly being called to a Message of Easter. The significant spiritual event for Service Was Very Irregular on our age is the hope for a swifter ascent of mankind towards a new and better conception of life and of its responsibilities. The message of Easter Day is a perpetual appeal to this new life. The risen Christ is lifting us in the infiniteness of His own sphere, in the fulness of His love, that where He is we may be also. With Him we press on thru inward tumult, thru outward confict and defeat, thru toil of hand and soul. thru loss and death, thru illusions and self-deceptions, but with Him forever rising from the ashes of ourselves. With Him in Gethsemane and on Golgotha, but with Him also on the resurrection morning.

IDEALISM IN LIFE MOST POTENT FORCE

Vision Required, Besides Specialization in Social Laws. Says Dr. Herridge.

Rev. Dr. Herridge of Ottawa occupied the rostrum at yesterday's service at convocation hall, and for his sermon chose as his text, Joser h dreams, especially the words: "Behold. this dreamer cometh. Come now, therefore, and let us slay him, and cast him into some pit, and we shall see what will become of his dreams." Dr. Herridge recounted Joseph's two dreams, and how his brethren hated him because he had vision, how they were jealous of his superiority and felt his presence a rebuke to them-selves, and how, since they could not bring him to their own level, they decided to cast him into the pit, whence he was sold by them, and afterwards carried into Egypt, and into the service of Pharaoh, where his wise administration placed him next in importance to Pharaoh himself. Thus was he enabled to have his revenge upon his brethren.

Joseph's brthren. said Dr. Herridge, represented the prejudice of what are called practical men against the idealists. "The practical man is the man who does, and the most practical man is the one who gets from what he does, not the maximum of money or does, not the maximum of money or pay, but whose whole nature is lifted to higher levels by the effort, "and this," continued the speaker, "was the only kind of practicability, and to have it one must be enamored or have vision. He considered there was more idealism in all of us than has ever hear brought into exarcise." been brought into exercise."

War Taught Idealism.

The war, said the speaker, had taught us idealism, which, so far from being hazy and unproductive, is the most potent force in life. "The Germans had their ideals, or they never could have displayed such fiendish unity" he added. On our side we unity," he added. On our side, we were inspired by idealism; we would never have sent our men overseas, nor would they have gone, if they had to fight for something tangible. The fight was for the ideals of liberty and righteousness. The fact is the war, which ended so gloriously, brings us to a more noble and arduous task. We are now face to face with war against ignorfits if they remind us of Joseph. "Keep Chas. H. Downey and others, your best dreams and seek God's help Charter Presented.
