ST. JOHN, N. B., SEPT. 23, 1905.

CANADA, NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR.

The statement that the officers of the Canadian government who went to Labrador to observe the eclipse came into collision with the Newfoundland authorities over the question of jurisdiction is contradicted. But the fact remains, and ought to be faced at once, that the boundary between Newfoundland, Labrador and the Canadian territory or district of Ungava has not been defined, and is a matter of controversy. It should have been settled years ago, at a time when the region had not been explored, and when the interior country was not considered valuable. The exploration of the Canadian geological survey and of independent travellers has disclosed the existence of considerable tracts of valuable timber, and it is now supposed that the search for mineral wealth may reveal other resources of national importance.

So long as it was thought that Labrador was a coast fishing region and nothing more no dispute was likely to arise. The coast was conceded to belong to Newfoundland, and neither country had any temptation to claim jurisdiction in the interior. The assumption has prevailed in Canada that Newfoundland owned a narrow strip of coast sufficient for the fishing operations, and that all the rest of the country belonged to the Dominion. In the last Canadian Year Book, a government publication, the area of the Labrador coast belonging to Newfoundland is given at about 7,000 square miles. We have the authority of the interior department for the statement that the Canadian district of Ungava has an area of 349,000 square miles. The Dominion statistician's estimate of the area of Newfoundland-Labrador seems to be based on the idea of a ten mile strip for a length of 700 miles, which is about the direct distance from the Straits of Belle Isle to Cape Chidley. Following the sinuosities of the greatly broken coast line the distance would be much greater, and the ten mile strip, if so irregularly drawn, would contain an area nearly double Dr. Johnson's estimate.

But Newfoundland does not propose to have her interests pent up into a ten mile strip. We gather from an article which the St. John's News reports that Newfoundland's claim includes all that part of the mainland from the coast to the watershed between the Atlantic and Hudson Bay. This claim has great significance in view of the fact that Hamilton Inlet and River penetrate the country at least three hundred miles as the crow flies, and that the best spruce land is on this stream. In 1897 all the region south of this river was assigned to Quebec province, while the northern stretch of country is mapped as the district of Ungava. The area of Quebec province is now stated in the official publications to be 241,000 square miles, whereas before this readjustment it was represented as 227,000 square miles. A large part of the additional territory, together with much of the region to the north, would fall to Newfoundland if the full claim of that colony, as stated in this argument, were sustained. It may be mentioned that while the Canadian Year Book gives 7,000 square miles as the area of Newfoundland-Labrador, the Statesman's Year Book, which is regarded in England as the highest authority on matters of geography, credits Newfoundland with 120,000 square miles of territory in Labrador.

It may be thought surprising that so great a discrepancy should exist. The documents on which the titles depend might be more helpful than to allow so much margin for doubt. But the only declaration constituting a title is a commission to the governor of Newfoundland, which sets forth his jurisdiction over "the Island of Newfoundland and the Islands adjacent, and all the coast of Labrador from the entrance of Hudson's Straits to a line to be drawn due north and south from Anse Sablon, on the said coast to the fifty-second degree of north latitude, and all the Islands adjacent to that part of the coast of Labrador."

Anse Sablon is north of the western end of the Straits of Belle Isle. There is no dispute about that point. Nor is it difficult to draw a line due north thence to the fifty-second degree, which is only forty miles from Anse Sablon. The question is where to draw the line after this parallel is reached. To continue due north is to strike the Atlantic coast in a hundred miles or so, and then to go far into the ocean. According to the Newfoundland argument, the English map makers began north at Cape Chidley and dropped a line along the height of land, following as near as might be the 64th degree of west longitude. This strikes the 52nd degree of latitude seven degrees west of the point where the north line from Anse Sablon reaches that parallel. The two points are joined by following the line of the 62nd degree. Such a map would give to Newfoundland a block of territory of 150 miles east and west, and 60 to 100 miles north and south, which is Canadian legislation. Quebec province, Ungava, as presented in the Canadian official maps, is a three-cornered block of this shape, the corner being an extreme depth of some 300 miles and a maximum width east and west of about 250.

The Newfoundland claim sets forth that the Hudson Bay Company's grants, which they say (though they give no evidence to support the statement) were bounded on Newfoundland-Labrador, did not run east of the 64th meridian. They also refer to a grant of 200,000 acres of Labrador by the imperial government to the Moravian missionaries in 1774, when the governor of Newfoundland was informed of this depth of territory was supposed then to belong to Newfoundland. Possibly this proceeding might have been contemporaneous with an occurrence the date is disputed. We refer to the announcement made by a visitor to one of the King's ministers that Newfoundland was an island. The statesman was so impressed with the value of the discovery that he ran on to tell the King, saying that he was sure his majesty would be delighted to hear it.

The Newfoundland writer contends that Newfoundland should either be confirmed in the possession of the territory assigned to that colony in the English maps, as mentioned above, that is to say all the country drained by rivers flowing into the Atlantic; or else it should have a strip forty miles wide on the coast line and around every inlet. This forty miles is supposed to be the width of the coast strip at the one point in which the original instructions are definite. If this wide conceded Canada would be dependent upon Newfoundland for access to any part of Labrador from the east, whereas the Dominion claims the coast of Hamilton Inlet, which gives access to Lake Melville.

It may not be generally known that Newfoundland's continuous ownership of the Labrador coast dates back only to 1809. The whole region was claimed as a part of French Canada. At the close of the French regime not only the Labrador coast but Anticosti and the Magdalen Islands were annexed to Newfoundland. The government of that colony found difficulties in dealing with French grants and other private rights, and in 1774 these regions were transferred to Canada. But Canada in turn found the expense of the Labrador fisheries burdensome and in 1809 that coast was re-annexed to Newfoundland, Anticosti and the Magdalen Islands remaining Canadian. So the jurisdiction has remained ever since, and no question of proprietorship would probably have arisen if the coast had remained the only part of the country which had any value.

It will be agreed that the line ought to be settled. Even if it were taken for granted that Newfoundland is destined to be a part of the Dominion, the necessity for demarcation would remain. Newfoundland and Quebec would be provinces, and Ungava would be a territory whose limit must be defined. The question is one of the construction of a despatch, and also of historical understanding. It lends itself easily to independent arbitration. The claim of Newfoundland to 100,000 square miles or more of territory which is thought by Canadians to be a part of the Dominion, cannot be set aside by ignoring it. If the matter is allowed to drift it may come up later when the settlement will be attended with much bitterness. The discovery of valuable iron mines and the development of the lumber properties may lead to disagreeable conflicts of authority and to domestic troubles which will be a great delight to all enemies of British rule on this continent. It does not seem reasonable to construe a grant of a coast to mean a grant of all the territory drained to that coast. That would place Ohio on the coast of the Gulf of Mexico, Michigan on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, Manitoba on Hudson Bay, Ungava on the Mediterranean, and Apontook on the Bay of Fundy. But the Labrador grant to Newfoundland has some limits and boundaries, and these should be ascertained with all reasonable dispatch.

A BENEFACTOR.

Dr. Bernardo, whose death is announced, was a great friend of poor and homeless children. No one else in the world has taken care of so many waifs. Doubtless a considerable number of these orphans or deserted children have not made a success of life, after all that was done for them. But that happens to a certain percentage from the best families, who have had expert attention and domestic training from the cradle. The Bernardo boys and girls must not be judged by the standard of those who come of respectable and orderly parents. Yet thousands of these once destitute and homeless children may be found in this and other countries, who have no need to apologize for themselves and their position in society. Whatever may be said of the policy of admitting very large numbers at one time of these children, with their unhappy inheritance, into a thinly settled country like this, there is no difference of opinion as to the great service that Dr. Bernardo has performed to the class of children who most needed assistance.

MR. WEAVER AND HIS PARTY.

Mr. Weaver is a man who does not turn back when he has put his hand to the plough. Philadelphia has not hitherto shown a disposition to turn rascals out and keep them out. It is now to be seen whether the city will stand by Mr. Weaver. He was not elected to carry out the programme which he has undertaken. It was a painful surprise to him when he found that so many leading men in his own party were hoodlums. But when he made the discovery he did not make the mistake of organizing his own campaign. The critical time comes when he appeals to the electors of an intensely republican city to justify his punishment of leading operators of the republican machine.

RICHIBUCTO.

CUT HIS THROAT.

John Hughes While in Poor Health

Made an Attempt on His Life But

Will Probably Recover.

Despondent after months of severe illness John Hughes, aged 42 years, and attempted suicide at his home, No. 11 Hill street, north end, early yesterday morning and now lies in the General Public Hospital in a critical condition.

Mr. Hughes is a caulker by trade, and one of the best known residents in the North End. Since December last he has been unable to work, having an attack of pleurisy, and since early spring he has not had the use of his right arm. Medical attendance since the commencement of his ailment and the best of care have not made a cure, and while the incessant pains and the thoughts of his case being a burden to the strain has been apparently too much for him. He has been greatly despondent for some time past, and it is said that he has threatened to take his life on different occasions.

His family have found it necessary to keep a sharp watch on him for some time past, fearing that he would make a desperate attempt. An instrument that he might use to end his life was thought to have been kept out of his reach, and his family were not only shocked but greatly surprised when they discovered that he had cut his throat with a razor which he had in his possession, and without any of the household even suspecting it.

Wednesday night Mr. Hughes seemed to be in better spirits and much better in health than usual. His wife, who for months has been an untiring attendant, was with him until after four o'clock yesterday morning, when her husband told her she might as well go and he down and rest, as he was all right.

Mrs. Hughes then went to another room to rest, and shortly after five o'clock she heard such heavy breathing that she investigated, and on entering the room was horrified to see Mr. Hughes lying on the bed with a deep gash across his throat. He had lost considerable blood, and the pillow and bedding was saturated. Mrs. Hughes immediately alarmed the household, and Dr. Chas. M. Pratt, of Main street, was summoned to the scene, and attended to the wound until Dr. Pratt found the cut a deep one just above the larynx, about four or five inches long. The razor had almost severed the windpipe, but had not cut the jugular vein.

Dr. Sheffield, who had been attending Mr. Hughes for his illness, was also summoned and assisted Dr. Pratt in dressing the wound. The would-be suicide was sent in the ambulance to the hospital about ten o'clock yesterday morning for treatment.

Mr. Hughes, besides his wife, has a family of two sons and two daughters. He is well known about the city, and the news of the attempt on his life spread quickly and was heard with much regret by his many friends.

It was reported at the hospital last night that Hughes was resting quite easily and that so far as could be judged at present his condition seemed quite favorable for recovery.
