

WILSON PROCLAIMS AN ADVANCED AMERICANISM IN ADDRESS TO CONGRESS

President, in scathing language, denounces hyphenated Americans who endanger American neutrality by intrigues on behalf of belligerents — National Defence Scheme outlined.

Washington, Dec. 7.—President Wilson, in his annual address to Congress today, dealing mainly with national defence, proclaimed an advanced Americanism, growing from the guardianship of the Monroe Doctrine to "the full and honorable association" of all the Americas.

Although, in the longest address he has yet delivered to Congress, the President touched upon a variety of subjects the predominating note was the necessity of a policy of military preparedness to meet the readjustments of the next generation as they will affect the American continent. He emphasized his point by saying: "Unless you take it within your view and permit the full significance of it to command your thought, I cannot find the right light in which to set forth the particular matter that lies at the very front of my whole thought as I address you today—I mean national defence."

Plays Hyphenated-Americans. The point was not overshadowed when the president, in the most unassured terms he ever has employed before Congress, denounced naturalized Americans who, by their sympathies for the European belligerents, have endangered American neutrality. While Congress cheered him loudly, he referred to them as having "poured the poison of disloyalty into the very arteries of our national life," and as those who "would turn in malign reaction against the government and the people who had welcomed and nurtured them."

With evidences of deep feeling the president expressed "the even deeper humiliation and scorn which very self-possessed and thoughtfully patriotic Americans must feel when he thinks of them and of the discredit they are daily bringing upon us."

While the president's outline of the administration plan for the army and navy passed without a ripple of applause, and his references to the pan-Americanism were only punctuated with evidences of approval, Republicans and Democrats, alike, joined in an "emphatic demonstration at his words of condemnation for those he assailed so unreservedly."

The president took up pan-Americanism at the very outset of his message.

"All the governments of America," said he, "stand, so far as we are concerned, upon a footing of genuine and unquestioned independence. We retain unabated, the spirit which was so frankly put into words by President Monroe. We still mean to make a common cause of national independence and of political liberty in America, but that purpose is now better understood, so far as it concerns ourselves."

The moral, the President said, was that the States of America were not hostile rivals but co-operating friends, and that their association was not likely to give them a new significance in world affairs.

"Separated, they are subject to all the cross currents of the confused politics of a world of hostile rivalries," said he. "United in spirit and purpose, they cannot be disappointed in their peaceful destiny. This is pan-Americanism. It has none of the spirit of empire in it. It is the embodiment, the effectual embodiment, of the spirit of law and independence, and liberty and mutual service."

Great democracies, the President said, are peaceful, not seeking war, and without thought of conquest or domination.

"But just because we demand unimpaired development and the undisturbed government of our own lives upon our own principles of right and liberty," he declared, "we resent, from whatever quarter it may come, the aggression we ourselves will not practice. We insist upon security in prosecuting our self-chosen lines of national development. We do more than that. We demand it also for others. From the first we have made common cause with all partisans of liberty on this side of the sea, and have deemed it as important that our neighbors should be free from all outside domination as that we ourselves should be; have set America aside as a whole for the uses of independent nations and political freedom."

National Defence

From that point the President emphasized the need of a national training for defense, in harmony with American ideals and institutions, and then referred briefly to the plans outlined for the army and navy, which he urged congress to sanction and put into effect, "as soon as they can be properly scrutinized and discussed."

Frequent demonstrations of approval greeted the President's declaration of the manifest duty of America, to "remain studiously neutral," toward the warring nations abroad, his assertion of friendship for Mexico, and his urgent recommendations for an increased merchant marine.

But chief attention centered about the delineation of the plans for national defense, the proclamation of Pan-Americanism, and the virility of the President's attack upon Americans, who, he said, had brought the good name of the government into contempt. He delivered his denunciation in crisp phrases, and congress seemed to hang on every word. Cheers rose from every part of the hall when he concluded it, and the demonstration reached its climax when the President urged enactment of laws to purge the nation of its internal perils.

"There are citizens of the United States, I blush to admit," he declared, "born under other flags, but welcomed under our generous naturalization laws to the full freedom and opportunity of America, who have poured the poison of disloyalty into the very arteries of our national life; who have sought to bring the authority and good name of our government into contempt, to destroy our university, wherever they thought it effective for their vindictive purposes, to strike at them and to debase our politics to the uses of foreign intrigue. No federal laws exist to meet this situation, because such a thing would have seemed incredible in the past. Such creatures of passion, disloyalty and anarchy must be crushed out. They are not many, but they are infinitely malignant, and the hand of our power should close over them at once."

BOY SCOUTS CONCERT.
