ROUMANIANS BACKED FORMER EMPEROR CHAS.

King Pledged Support of Hapsburg Coup d' Etat, in Gratitude for Mediation.

Budapest, Dec. 14.—Sensational revelations that ex-Emperor Charles claimed to have been acting on the strength of a written pledge by the King of Romania in favor of the Hapsburg restoration in Hungary were made in the Diet during the discussion of a resolution to lift the parliamentary immunity of Count Sigismund, ex-Ambassador Gerard's brother-in-law, Count Andrasz, and two other leaders in the Karlist party and to permit their trial for high treason. The government spokesman declared that Colonel Lehar, a brother of the composer of "The Merry Widow," came to Budapest sometime before the coup d'etat to win over the officers of the Budapest garrison and was provided with a present from Charles that King Ferdinand had promised him in writing that Romania would show sympathy for the ex-Emperor's attitude in the peace negotiations of Bucharest when Charles opposed the severe German demands by retreating from interference with the movement.

Colonel Lehar, a cousin of the Emperor, was arrested and was imprisoned in a military prison. The complaint made by Postal Inspector Joseph S. Gosselin, of New York, charged Calabria with attempting to buy off several agents for prosecution, while the implied warning that the suspect might be turned loose otherwise.

Consequently, Calabria, who after noon had been held before United States Commissioner Cullen, the complainant, was released.

The postal authorities had been working increasingly on the case, which was considered important in view of the ex-Emperor's attitude in the peace negotiations of Bucharest when Charles opposed the severe German demands by retreating from interference with the movement.

Colonel Lehar, a cousin of the Emperor, was arrested and was imprisoned but Lehar stated all preparations had been made for his incarceration in Russia and Croatia which would paralyze his activities, leaving only the Czechs to be reckoned with. Charles also was told he believed that the big Entente would consider him a traitor if he took an attitude as adopted toward King Constantine of Greece, viz.: not a formal protest, but the acceptance of a fait accompli.

The Romanian attitude bore out Charles' hopes, but the failure of the Jassy Ringers and the unexpected vigorous attitude of the Entente ruined his plans.

Calabria was picked up in Jersey City on Nov. 5 by the police on suspicion. He had just arrived from New York in a motor car with another man whom he said was a taxi passenger. Believing that his machine stalled with the description of the motor car coming by the mail bands, the police set in and arrested him.

Calabria was picked up in Jersey

City on Nov. 5 by the police on suspicion. He had just arrived from New York in a motor car with another man whom he said was a taxi passenger.

Believing that his machine stalled with the description of the motor car coming by the mail bands, the police set in and arrested him.

Postal Inspector Doran, in charge of the case, said Calabria would be charged with robbery and assault, the latter charge to be based upon the attempt to kill or injure the other passengers.

According to Doran, Calabria was the man whom Haversack described as having stood on the running board of the mail truck and having kept him covered with a revolver while his companions transferred the packages of registered mail to the bandits.

It turned out, the major said, that

Calabria was the mayor of Jerusalem who deserted his post to defend and pressuring the English forces to be descending on the city he had "surrendered" by handing over the keys of the city to the first man he saw in British uniform.

As it turned out, he continued, the general proved to have been good and Doran, as a result, as this dignitary was forced to repeat the procedure three times thereafter.

"Brigadier Watson was informed,"

he said, "and came into Jerusalem, formally accepted the keys of the city, but the division general ordered that it was fit for a person to capture Jerusalem and ordered Watson to return the keys."

"This was done and some hours later the general, accompanied by a gorgeous retinue, accepted the keys from the mayor for the third time.

"Indeed?" Are you going to offer your landlord some appealing packages?"

"Not exactly," she replied. "You see, it's this way: He's comin' round this morning, and this mornin' we'll crack 'em and kiss 'em on our wayward, it'll be all right, I'll be out about the rent; thinkin' it's the drains."

"The poor mayor died two weeks afterward—it was said he contracted pneumonia from so much running around bareheaded."

"Good morning," said an English housewife to her son, "I'd like another dozen of these eggs you made yesterday."

"Folks like 'em, eh?" observed the shopman.

"Never mind the folks," she retorted. "I want 'em for a special purpose. They're going to let me off on a quarter."
