about as we may for illustrations to shew this impossibility, all are too weak.

The impossibility of stopping the sun in his course; the impossibility of a single individual resisting the united physical force of the material, or all the weight of influences of the intelligent creation. These are cases of impossibility as extreme as imagination itself could suggest, and yet they feebly set forth the impossibility of occupying neutral ground towards Christ and salvation.

For what does the mortal who would be neutral towards Christ attempt? He attempts to fly in the face, resist, defeat all the most glorious plans and purposes of God. For these all centre in constituting his Son Head over all things. In order to maintain the honour of the divine government, and to repair the ruin which sin, if suffered to go without a remedy, would bring upon it, Christ is the divinely anointed universal King.

For any mortal, therefore, to stand out against Christ, under this deep aggravation too, that Christ comes forth in his gospel as the Saviour who, "to seek and to save that which was lost," has not hesitated to come from the throne to the cross—who has not spared himself, but has cheerfully thrown himself in the gap between us and ruin. Who has ever rightly measured the mad impiety and guilt of attempting neutrality here?

Oh what an emphasis does our subject give to the Saviour's words, "If ye believe not that I am He, ye shall die in your sins." "He that is not with me is against me, and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."

3. Consecration to Christ is the call which the subject loudly sends forth to the world in its associated relations.

It calls on nations by the argument, that they are specially designed agencies, and means of influence in the hands of Christ their King, of bringing the world over to him. It calls on families and heads of families by the argument, that they are designed to be in the hands of Christ, the head of all the families of the earth—nurseries for the rearing a holy seed—one godly generation after another to serve him in his Church.

But if the call for this national consecration be addressed to one nation above all others, Great Britain is that nation.

For if Britain holds a pre-eminence among the nations, if it wields a master influence over the world's affairs, if its dominions be so large that the sun never sets on them, if it be mistress of the seas, if it be the world's great workshop and banker, to whom but to Christ is it

urges

universe

creatures

universe

s might

ligences

to act.

resenta-

od men

e,—yea.

animate

. Yes,

at Cal-

to give

at "all

osition

olemn,
f God.
ntered
ent of which
d the
thing

l the

who the with at it hap-the vith-rist,

we

! we