Lake Doiran, a distance of about 100 miles, the allies have opened a great offensive. On every section of the line General Sarrail's artillery is roaring day and night, but the campaign is in its initial phase and there is little to indicate a very when the initial phase and there is little to indicate as yet where the main attempt at an advance will be made.

Bitter fighting is proceeding in the bend of the Cerna river and in the neighborhood of the Vardar, the two points on the Macedonian front where the wild barbarous country of mountain and sterile deserts is broken by fertile valleys. Military critics are agreed that it is upon these valleys that the allied forces must force a way, but the operations have not advanced far enough to indicate which is the chosen point of attack.

indicate which is the chosen point of attack.

In France the deadlock continues, but behind the fighting line the allies are massing men and guns for another tremendous blow, such as that which broke the Hindenburg line, and loosened the grip of the Germans on Champagne. General Maurice, chief director of British military operations, announces that the coming drive will be mightier in force and extent than those which spend the battles of Arras and the Somme, and the indications are that the blow will not be long delayed.

The comparative lull on the fighting front in France has once more directed atention to the political situation which appears to be rapidly reaching a crisis or rather a series of crisis. The news from Russia is increasingly gloomy in nature and it becomes more and more a question whether the provincial government can weather the storm which has been precipitated by the Radical Socialists and visionaries. In any event there seems little likelihood of any effective military action on the part of Russia for a long time to come.
