is just it. The politician is almost always willing to espouse any cause which will give him a majority of votes. If federal representatives at Ottawa are as a body anything like our local representatives, we must not expect them to be much in advance of public sentiment on any moral question. For unpopular issues the average politician has little regard, but for votes he has a most wonderful respect. Let every well-wisher of the Temperance cause, every patriot, every Christian, begin to work to ensure such a majority for the banishment of the liquor traffic from within our borders, as will be impossible for any political party to disregard or consider in any other way, but as the expressed emphatic sentiment of the nation.
