About Copper King Mattresses.

The frames are made of kiln dried white maple, and strong enough to withstand any strain. The fabrics are woven of the highest grade tinned mattress wire—reinforced with special copper woven bands—each mattress has three special cross wires running from side to side of the fabric. This improvement distributes the load—an improvement found in no other mattress. We believe this is the best mattress on the market for comfort, costs less than many makes, and is always entirely satisfactory. Prices run from $2.75 up to $4.50.

In Society.

IT IS NOT THE CORRECT THING.

For a woman to try to make a charity organization the stepping-stone to social advancement.

For a woman in moderate circumstances to try to entertain on the same scale as her wealthy friends.

For people to live beyond their means.

For a young man working on a salary to emulate the example of his wealthier associates.

For a woman to cheat the grocer in order to dress her daughter in silk attire and a sea-kin jacket.

For a young man to spend half his salary for flowers and opera tickets for a rich girl, who may accept the attentions gracefully, but will be very far from accepting the man who offers them.

For a girl to accept valuable presents from gentlemen.

For a consistent Catholic to permit any attentions whatever from a divorced man, and only what is conscientiously proper from any married man.

To devote more time to social pleasures than to religious and home duties.

To think that a few prayers hurried through at three o'clock in the morning, when one is half asleep, constitute a proper night prayer.

For a girl to be on the constant look-out for a rich husband. She is generally disappointed.

To dance so much as to injure one's health.

For those who practice the old-fashioned custom of keeping open house on New Year's day to offer wine to their callers.

To forget that time is but a prelude to eternity.

The Correct Thing for Catholics.—Alfonso XIII., of Spain.

(Secret Heart Review.)

The Fortnightly Review opens its June number with an article, by L. Higgins, on Alfonso XIII., of Spain. He says: "For long, the boy was delicate and gave little promise of growing up to be the fine, tall, and alert youth, full of vigor and animal spirits, that we see him to-day. It is due to the wise care of the Queen-Regent that this is so. She has never allowed anything to interfere with the strict rules she laid down to ensure that while he was being taught all that was necessary for an ordinary well-educated youth of the present day, and much besides, that his position as king of a great nation made desirable, he should lead a healthy, open-air life with ample recreations of a kind likely to build up a somewhat delicate constitution. The result can not fail to be gratifying to her, and the wisdom of keeping him up to the last moment of his irresponsible life strictly to the routine of his studies and his boyish recreations, even at the risk of making him somewhat of a stranger to his people, is fully justified."

The King's Mother.

Of the King's mother we read, "When Maria Christina of Austria was proclaimed Regent on the death of her husband, and before the birth of the child on whom so much depended, she was ably and cheerfully aided by the Ministers, who sank all political rivalry before the pathetic situation of a woman borne down by sharpest adversity but bravely struggling to do her duty to the nation; and she quickly gained the respect, as she had already had the sympathy, of her people, by the strictness with which she observed the Constitution, and the infinite care which she devoted to bringing up her boy to be a worthy successor to the father whom she had so dearly loved. It is small wonder that Alfonso is devoted to his mother, and that he constantly refers to the father whom he never saw, but whom he has been brought up to revere. The home life in the Palace has always been one of great simplicity and quiet routine; no festivities of any kind have been held there since the death of Alfonso XII.; the whole life of the Queen-Regent has been absorbed in the care of her children, especially that of the King. Her own apartments were situated beneath those of the boy, with a private staircase leading up to them, and nothing was left to the responsibility of servants or attendants; the Queen herself constantly superintended the daily care of the child, and would steal softly up many times before retiring to rest herself, to make sure that all was right. During the somewhat severe illness which the boy-King suffered when still a small child, she allowed no one to nurse him but herself.

Items of Interest.

It is reported that Mrs. Winthrop Rutherford, fourth daughter of Levi F. Morton, former vice-president of the United States, was recently received into the Catholic Church.

At St. Boniface's Industrial School, Banning, Cal., where there are more than 100 Indian scholars, there is an orchard of about thirty-five acres, in which may be found in season many varieties of fruit.

European exchange chronicles the sudden death at Munich of the distinguished Dominikan, Father Denife, who was preparing to proceed to Cambridge with Father Biale to receive the doctorate honoris causa.

The heroism of the late Father Thomas Geraghty, a young Irish priest, who, on July 6, 1903, died from smallpox contracted in the course of his sacred duties, has been fittingly commemorated by the erection in the Church of Our Lady, Liverpool—where he labored—of a beautiful high altar.

The oft-repeated statement that Admiral Togo is a Catholic is contradicted, says the "London Monitor and New Era," by the Auxiliary Bishop of Tokio. The Bishop says, however, that a great many Catholics are prominent in the Government of Japan, and that the Mikado and his ministers are most favorable to Catholic missionary work.

Pope Gregory XVI., died on June 1, 1846 nearly sixty years ago, and it would seem impossible that a Bishop appointed by him could be still alive and ruling a diocese. But a few days ago Dr. Daniel Murphy, Archbishop of Hobart, Tasmania, the last prelate of Pope Gregory's creation, entered on his sixty-first year. He was born in Cork while the battle of Waterloo was being fought, was consecrated an Indian Bishop in 1846 and translated to Hobart in 1865.

The Madrid correspondent of "The Standard," of London, has poured effective cold water on the rumour that was being made for political purposes about a letter from the King of Spain to Cardinal Casanas about the erection of a Protestant chapel at Barcelona.

"Cardinal Casanas," says the correspondent, "within his rights, drew the attention of the Government to the fact that the Barcelona Protestant chapel, then in the course of erection, had transgressed the Spanish law, which prohibits the external exhibition of religious emblems, except those of the Church of Rome. The Government quietly formally took up the matter, and the necessary alterations were made in a spirit of friendship and harmony. The chapel was consecrated, and nothing more would have been heard of the matter but for the letter from Cardinal Casanas to the King himself and the publication of the King's reply."

The bill which was introduced into the German Reichstag to ensure personal and corporate liberty of worship throughout the empire has collapsed with the termination of the session, says the London "Catholic Times."

Many people will be surprised to learn that a bill for such a purpose is deemed requisite. "Is not toleration," they will ask, "already practiced throughout the German States?" In some of the Protestant German States the prevailing policy is far from being tolerant, and the bill has therefore been received with anything but favor by the Protestant Conservatives. As an instance of what takes place, we may say that the three hundred Catholics of the industrial town of Meerane, in the Kingdom of Saxony, which counts thirty thousand inhabitants, petitioned the Prussian Ministry to be allowed to have Mass six times in the year. They waited nine months for an answer. Then the answer came. It was to the effect that the Ministry failed to see the need of a Catholic service in the town, and that the holding of such a service would disturb the religious peace.

A priest who was staying for a few weeks at Helligsdamm, a watering place in Mecklenburg-Schwerin, asked permission of the authorities to say Mass at the local church, but it was not granted. There is a great deal of room for progress in some of the German States. The tolerance bill will be reintroduced at a future time. Meanwhile the public will be enlightened as to the necessity for it.

A man who knows it all yet not in the least surprised when he heard of a motor-car which could be turned at will into a bedstead or grand piano. He said he knows a man who turned a motor-car into a telegraph pole, a ditch, a fence, and a house, all within a few hours.

The Athenism of Mr. Thompson.

Noting Francis Thompson writes eloquently on that abuse of asceticism which does not recognize that the body is bound up with the soul, and that each has, if we may so phrase it, inseparable claims. The theme is hardly new to thinking persons, . . . but Mr. Thompson throws some interesting side lights on it, comparing Italy with the barbaric North, and the men of former times with the present race, which has less riotous animality and a plentiful supply of neurotic tendencies. Science has helped us to good sense. We know, for instance, that some forms of passion practiced by the devout in Pagan days are a sure way to promote hysteria. It is pointed out that we have to foster the energies of the body, without forgetting to foster also the energies of the will. The late Archbishop Porter, S. J., 'was wisely right. He was aware that men of sedentary habit and unshakably introspective temperament may endure spiritual torments for which a fortnight's walking-tour is more sovereign than the exercises of St. Ignatius.' Mr. Thompson notes that the minds of old, however severe their penances, did not reduce themselves to listlessness or insensitivity—in fact, they were great workers in the world."

"King Alfonso did not hide his lamp of faith under a bushel while he was in the French capital," says the Catholic Transcriber. "In that heart of infidelity the Spanish monarch found time to visit Notre Dame, and when entering the church took holy water, made the sign of the cross, and kissed the ring of the Cardinal Archbishop with all the humility of the lowliest Catholic. His Catholic Majesty was accompanied by President Loubet who attended in an official capacity. It was the same in London—the King going through his devotions with all the modesty of a peasant that had been manifested across the Channel. Loyal and fearless in his religious observances, the ruler of Spain has set an example that will be remembered with pleasure by noblemen and cottagers. Religion is the gainer when those who represent secular authority are outspoken in their reverence for the Church and the masters in Israel."

MARRIED.

On the 29th of June, Miss Mary McEllan, formerly of Summerside, and John McDonald, of St. Andrew's, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony in St. Andrew's Church. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. A. F. McEllan, P. P., of St. Andrew's, brother of the bride, assisted by the Very Rev. Dr. Morrison, V. G., and the Rev. A. J. McEllan, of Morell. The bride was attended by Miss Nellie J. McDonald, and the groom by Dan McDonald. After partaking of dinner at the parochial home the happy couple drove to their future home. Among the invited guests were Dr. and Mrs. McEllan, Summerside, Dr. Ostran and Dr. McEllan, St. Dunstan's, Rev. P. D. McEllan, Tracadie, Rev. A. J. McDonald, Fort Augusta, and Rev. E. J. Gillis, St. Peter's Bay, and Rev. I. H. A. McDonald, St. Teresa's. The presents were numerous and costly showing the esteem in which the bride was held by her friends. We wish the interested parties many years of happiness.
