garden Party.

The organization and preparatory work for the garden party was done with a will, and the delightful weather combined to make the garden party at Silvertown yesterday one of the most successful ever held here. The large holiday makers were out to enjoy themselves; the material was available; they took advantage of it in the free spirit and a generous spirit and in themselves, they were lent an added beauty by the arrangement of bunting, flags and stalls and all the trappings of a fête. Many of the rambling under trees and in the glorious prospect of the steep hillsides. But this because there was no other sports of all kinds, organized and otherwise, to attract and onlookers alike. The date was crowded from the first ventures of the day. The weather was herewith shot at lightning speed. The first of the rain was a relief. A clear-cut race competition, which was a very obvious reason, also a Punch and Judy show and croquet competition—telling potato races, coconut shies, step-in fact, all the fun of the game loaded with candles, flags and other refreshments to their best to cater to over-demand. The C. L. B. Band and other pretty airs in the afternoon, and a very entertainment and display which were added attractions. The amount realized, $1,053.00, being reward for the expenditure of labor and thought. Sir Lady Outerbridge deserves thanks for putting their names at the disposal of the cause, and its success will be their credit. Too much appreciation cannot be expressed of the many ladies who are helping in other ways. Many one more to the success of the daughters, and the money will be a contribution to the comfort and joy of our boys on the

A Blasphemer.

It has come to this that Dr. Reinke, one of the class of government pensioned literati who have made Germany to sin, has openly blasphemed the God of the Christians, and openly confessed allegiance to the ancient gods whom the leaders of the Prussians never forsok. "The hearts of millions of Germans," he says, "were lifted to the God of the Christians at the commencement of the third year of the war with a profound measure of gratitude for the immeasurably great things we achieved during two years, over bitter struggles in this defensive war forced upon us." The Pharisee stood and prayed thus with himself. But the Pharisee did not lie; he believed what he said. Dr. Reinke did lie; he cannot have been such a fool as not to know the origin and development of this long planned war, or to think the God of the Christians, if he thinks there is such a one, does not know that he is lying to his face. We doubt very much if the millions of Germans were in that jubilant mood, over their conquests, though wherever they went to church their devotions were led in that false strain and flouted heaven with that petrified falsehood. The cry of the German heart was for peace. There is a subconsciousness in the people that they have offered their children to Molock in vain, or, as Dr. Reinke frankly puts it, to Thor.

Dr. Reinke further says of the said God of the Christians, that "he is the God of love, of faithfulness, of justice and mercy; we are to serve him 'in spirit and in truth.' In truth, indeed! and in the spirit of all those attributes—faithfulness, justice and mercy! But he says his service does not 'preclude us Germans from turning to the gods of our Teutonic forefathers,' particularly to Thor, who knew neither justice nor mercy. And he tells how one great final blow of Thor's merciless hammer is still to come, a blow which in reserve, and in which threat the Chancellor is supported by the whole nation. When this blow, which is to consist 'in operating simultaneously and ruthlessly with all the forces and all the instruments of war at our disposal,' falls it will make the rock of Great Britain waver. In anticipation of it, 'the Britanic giant lives in a state of constant fear and anxiety,' but he will never discuss peace until felled by it. That last is true anyway. We think we can speak for the Britanic giant a good deal more truly than Herr Professor Reinke can for the supposed, but suppressed, children of Thor, and for him we can say that his dearest wish is: Bring on your blow. That would end the war, but not by making the rock waver—Montreal Weekly Witness.

Everybody's Poem is Found.

(From "To-Day.")
Actual evidence I have none, But my aunt's charwoman's sister's son Heard a policeman on his beat Say to a housemaid in Downing Street That he knew someone, who had a friend, Who knew when the war was going to end.

This little verse has a curious history. It appeared anonymously in the "Bystander" a few weeks ago, and already it is more widely quoted than anything that has yet been written about the war. You will find it in every other paper that you pick up, and every other person who discusses the prospect of peace will recite it to you.

Apparently it has quite as many authors as a modern revue, for quite a number of people claim to have written it as an original contribution, and always without acknowledgment—the blushing authors making it a stipulation that their names shall not appear. Retired Colonels chuckle over it in their clubs—and send it to the papers. Ladies hear it across the tea-table—and send it to the papers. It is trotted out at the market ordinary and the farmers send it to their local papers. Everybody seems determined that everybody else shall hear it.

The verse was originally written by Mr. Reginald Arkell, who scored a big hit at the commencement of the war with his poem "Business as Usual," which was recited by Mr. Matheson Fang at most of the big recruiting meetings. At one time he thought of entertaining his fellow-authors to dinner, but the number has grown to such alarming proportions that he has had to abandon the idea. Mr. Arkell is sub-editor of the London "Opinion," and in that capacity he has been under the painful necessity of rejecting his own verse on more than one occasion, when it has been submitted to him by one or other of its various authors. I should be indebted to any of my readers who can add further information as to the strange eventful history of these now famous lines.
