rail and water, numbers of Summer tourists visit the town annually. The hotel accommodations are above criticism, and everything else calculated to attract visitors in the way of sport, fishing, bathing, scenery, boating and yachting are to be found for the seeking.

Two Rivers, another enterprising Wisconsin town, is situated on Lake Michigan, a few miles above Manitowoc. It is connected with the latter by rail, and in Summer by steamers on the lake. The population numbers about 3,000 and is increasing with noticeable celerity, since the many advantages of the locality are beginning to be appreciated. To the pleasure seeker it offers the same attractions as does its sister town, and there is little difference either as to the quality or quantity.
