invention by Professor Majorams of a new microphone. While conversation between the two cities is not yet easy, in the tests made by the telephone experts of London communi-cation has been established and disj.inted words have been heard. The inveptor hopes, by improvements, to make conver-sation between the Roman and English capitals as easy as between the various suburba nexchanges of London. "To establish telephonic communication between Rome and London," said a wel-known electrician, "would be perfectly sim-ple if the connecting wires were thik enough. You can telephone to any distance provided your wires are sufficiently heav. It is merely a question of money.
