"The Virginian" as dramatized by Owen Wister and the late Kirke La Shelle from Mr. Wister's novel of the same name, and the most successful drama of western life ever produced on any stage, will be presented at the Princess the first half of the week with an Easter Monday matinee, with a caste of exceptionally clever artists, including that sterling actor, W. S. Hart, as the Virginian, and the original Frampas, Frank Campeau.
In its dramatized form "The Virgin ian" is displayed in four acts; the first at Uncle Hewey's, the second at Judge Henry's ranch, the third at the camp of the horse thieves, and the fourth in Medicine Bow, Wyoming. The opportunities afforded for stage settings are fine, and the author has succeeded in procuring scenery typical of west-Hewey's with a dance and christening. The Virginian, an invited guest, tries to become better acquainted with Molly Wood, a school teacher from New England, whom he has previously saved from drowning. He receives little encouragement, but is determined, In this act he quarrels with the bad man. Trampas, and the act ends with the exceedingly funny scene where the Virginian and Honey Wiggin mix the babies left sleeping in an adjoining room. In the second act, at Judge Henry's ranch, the Virginian is elevated to ranch boss, and his love affair is progressing nicely until the lynching expedition comes up, when he is ordered to head a party of vigilantes to capture the cattle thieves, among whom is his loyal, but misguided friend Steve. The third act, the Horse Thief Pass, where the cowboys and the cattle thieves have a most exciting scene, epds in a lynching. The final act, Medicine Bow, where the bad man, Trampas, meets his reward, and the Virginian and Molly Wood have no more difficulty in their love affair. Is very realistic.

Fannie Ward Coming. It is now generally conceded that an American girl of charm and vivacity makes the best comedienne. The London critics admit this and it was forced from them by our own plucky Fannie Ward of St. Louis, who went alone to England and in a short time had the English public and critics at her tiny feet. Miss Ward has yielded to the temptation to come home and win that approval which would be dear to the heart of any American girl. During her limited tour she has won over Chi-cago, Boston and New York completely, and during the week of April 19 will appear at the Princess Theatre in her greatest London success, "The New Lady Bantock," by England's famous humorist, Jerome K.
