

been added for local use, thus making it a more complete and useful book.

The afternoon service has been made more suitable to the young than heretofore, who are instructed in the proper Scripture lesson, and questioned monthly on the Catechism. In this service they are trained to take their part in the services of the Church,—singing its hymns and repeating its responses.

The number of district visitors—who have kindly volunteered their services in visiting and relieving the poor and distributing tracts, and whose labours cannot fail to be a benefit to those they systematically visit—has increased from four or five to twenty.

The debt on the schoolroom has been discharged; but a small sum still remains due on the adjoining library or classroom.

The attendance at the regular services of the Church is good, and the sacramental collections for the poor have, in several instances, been larger than those taken up on similar occasions in former years,—so that in many ways the Ministers of the Parish have to report progress, and feel encouraged in the prosecution of their labors.

The old Bog School, which was found inconveniently small, owing to the increasing number of children under Miss Harvie's superintendence, has been sold, and a site provided in a more eligible part, at the corner of Kent Street and Rochfort Square, on which, by the liberality of Christian friends, a large and handsome structure has been erected.
