The Russian Hero.

Among the officers of the Grand Duke's staff is a tall, handsome man with a lithe, slender, active figure, a clear blue eye, a large prominent, well-shaped nose, and a face young enough for a second Lieutenant. It is Skobeleff, the youngest General in the Russian army, the Conqueror of Khokland. He has the reputation, even among the Russians, of being a madman who would fling away his own life and those of his troops without the slightest regard for consequences. During the war which resulted in the conquest of Khokland, a Russian detachment of 300 men, with 400 Cossacks, was compelled to recreat before a superior force of the enemy. General Trotsky decided upon a night attack, and confided his plan to Col. Skobeleff, then his chief of staff. The latter entered into the whe were then asleep. Then he gave the signal for the attack by firing his pistol, and followed by his 150 Cossacks, he rode headlong into the enemy's camp of 6,000 or 7,000 men, shouting and yelling like fiends, and cutting down everything in their passage. For a marter of an hour the plain resonnded with shrieks and vells, shots, the trampling of horses,
