TWENTY-NINE NAMES ADDED TO LONDON VOTING LIST BY COURT OF REVISION TODAY

Hordes of Anxious Voters Swoop Down On Officials, Anxious To Know If Their Names Are On List — Evening Sessions Not At All Probable.

Although the courts of revision appointed in the four different wards to revise the voters' list in preparation for the temperance referendum did not open until 10 o'clock this morning. 29 names had been added to the lists before noon. It is fully expected that the six-day session of the courts in this city will swell the voters' list by several hundred names.

The number of successful applicants by no means indicate the number of anxious voters who appeared before each of the courts to insure that they would be given a vote. In some of the wards at least two-thirds of the inquirers discovered that their names were already on the list.

According to one of the officials in charge these inquiries caused considering the revision of the list and promised the revising officer. According to one of the officials in charge these inquiries caused considering the session in the county police court room, and Mr. Cluff's in a room adjoining the sheriff's office.

Many people have a misconception of the work of the revision courts, and so several appeared before the officers this morning to inquire whether their names were enrolled. These inquiries, the officer said should be made at the city hall.

Courts of revision held at the court house lacked excitement. Not a single name was struck off the lists for the referendum in Ward One and Ward Two. In the former ward, Col. C. M. R. Graham added 14 names this morning, and in the latter H. R. Cluff added 14 names. Col. Graham's court is in the sound be would be in this number were men.
