implication that extremes are to be avoided. To this I reply that if one course of action is found to be beneficial to man, and another harmful, one gains nothing by "converging" the two.

As for the issue of the same debate topic every year, it should be remembered that it has been two years since a debate on this topic was last held at York, and thus one half of the present undergraduate population wasn't at York when the last debate took place here. And if this debate was so redundant as the writer believes then why did 600 people attend?

As far as Students of Objectivism

as a group, having a limited spectrum of interests which are confined to this one topic (and the implication that we are responsible for the previous debates on this topic at York) the writer demonstrates a complete ignorance of the facts! Students of Objectivism was formed by myself in October of 1984 for the purpose of providing a forum for the discussion of Ayn Rand's philosophy of Objectivism.

While this is the first debate we have staged, previous events have included presentations on the following subjects: Atheism; Abortion; Nuclear Arms; George Orwell's 1984; Charity in A Selfish Society; Montessori Education; Creationism vs. Science. I think this hardly constitutes a narrow spectrum!

While it is true that there are many important issues in the world today, I think the issue of what type of society we should live in is one of the most crucial. It is for this reason that I undertook the organization of this debate, and will do so again in the future.

I find it unfortunate that Excalibur considers the issue of so little importance that it cannot find any room in its pages to even comment on such an event.
