Liberal party. Some of you will recall the great convention that was held at Ottawa in 1919, at which I was chosen as leader of the Liberal party. At that time, like the present, I was without a seat in Parliament and I had to find a constituency if I was to be in Parliament as leader of my party. I recall very well that at the close of that great convention some of the delegates who were present came to me and said, "Mr. King, you will have to find a constituency, and before you make a final decision think about the county of Glengarry." I do not know whether they had any authority from any source to extend that word at that time, but it is a word that has remained in my memory and always will; and it gains a new significance tonight because, as I say, it seems to complete the circle which links the year 1919 with the year 1945, and the association between Glengarry and myself.

As a matter of fact what happened on that occasion was this. Even before the final ballot had been cast Mr. John Bell, who was then the Premier of Prince Edward Island and who was on the platform while the votes were being counted, came over to me and said, "You are going to be chosen as leader. Now, before I return to Prince Edward Island let me ask you not to give a decision to anyone as to where you are going to run because we have a vacancy in Prince county in Prince Edward Island and I am sure our friends there will be glad to offer you to seat." When Mr. Bell returned to Prince county I received a telegram offering me the constituency of Prince in Prince Edward Island and I accepted that offer. I am tealing you tonight a little secret which has remained in my memory ever since, but which I am happy to disclose openly this evening.
