

Flax for Fibre.

Longstem, Ottawa 52.—This new selection (to be introduced in 1919) produces plants of quite unusual length, and appears to be unsurpassed as a variety for the production of fibre. It does not give a very large crop of seed.

Kostroma is a fairly uniform, commercial flax which has been found to be good for fibre production.

Buckwheat.

Buckwheat is a suitable crop for light soils in rather cool and moist climates. It will not do well if hot, dry weather occurs.

Rye buckwheat is certainly one of the most productive varieties. Indeed it appears to surpass all others in yield. It also gives a good growth of plants and is, therefore, a satisfactory sort for smothering weeds and for ploughing under.

Silverhull is popular on account of its bright appearance, and its superior qualities for flour-making.

VARIETIES RECOMMENDED BY THE DOMINION CEREALIST.

The varieties are arranged approximately in the order of their merits, those most generally suitable being put at or near the head of the list. Varieties, the names of which are enclosed in brackets, are considered less desirable than the others, for most conditions.
