QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS. Veterinary.

LAME COLT.

Yearling colt went lame. An examination revealed the foot very hard, and a hole extending from the sole half-way up the foot. I removed the hoof as far as the hole, but the colt is still lame and foot hard, and does not grow.

J. S. McA.

Ans.—Examine the hoof carefully, and if there be any pus give it free vent. I do not think the hole you mention causes lameness, as you do not mention the presence of pus. If pus were present here, it no doubt caused the lameness. There may be a ringbone that is not yet visible, but causes the lameness and hardness of the hoof. If possible, locate the trouble. If an abscess, apply warm poultices until lameness ceases, and then turn on damp pasture ground. If a ringbone is present, blister around the coronet every month during the summer. I think it would be wise to have your veterinarian examine this case. V.

ENLARGED JOINT—LUMP JAW.

1. Mare injured her hind fetlock during the winter, and it swelled badly. We treated it, and the lameness disappeared, but the joint is still enlarged. She has scratches now. Would it be advisable to breed her?

J. H. B.

Ans.—1. Give her a purgative of 8 drams aloes and 2 drams ginger. Apply hot linseed-meal poultices to the scratches for two days and nights. Then wash thoroughly, and rub with flannel cloths until dry. Do not wash again, but apply the following lotion, 3 times daily, until healed, viz.: 1 ounce each of acetate of lead and sulphate of zinc to a pint of water. After this, rub the enlarged joint well, once daily, with the following liniment, viz.: 4 drams each of iodine and iodide of potassium, and 4 ounces each of alcohol and glycerine. It will require a long time to reduce the enlargement. It would be all right to breed her after the operation of the purgative.

2. Lump jaw is caused by a fungus taken on the food and gaining the circulation through an abrasion on tongue, lips, cheeks, etc. It causes the formation of a tumor, usually in the neighborhood of the head, but may be in other parts or on an internal organ. In some cases the tumors are loose in the flesh, and in others bone is involved. The jaw bone, either upper or lower, is often involved. It becomes porous and enlarged, and often the bone surrounding the roots of the teeth is involved, when the teeth will become loose and drop out. The animal in these cases cannot masticate, hence fails in condition, and, eventually, dies. In other cases the teeth are not affected. In some cases, matter forms, the abscess bursts, and may or may not heal readily, sometimes heals only to break out again. In some cases there is no eruption. V.

Miscellaneous.

THREATENED WITH HEAVES.

1. I have a mare eleven years old which has a bad cough, rattles some at nose, I think is threatened with heaves. At times her breathing shows signs of heaves, but she does not wheeze at all; has coughed at different intervals for the past two years. Is there any cure? If not, is there anything to relieve?

2. Does formaldehyde, prepared for treating potatoes, and left standing in a barrel for two or three weeks, lose its strength? YOUNG FARMER.

Ans.—1. Heaves, once established, cannot be cured, but the symptoms can be relieved to a considerable extent. Be careful not to overload the stomach with bulky food, and give grain in proportion to work done. Dampen all food given with lime water. Water before feeding, and not too liberally. Avoid working shortly after a meal. Raw linseed oil, given daily, in doses of one to three ounces on the feed, is also advised by some.

2. Little loss of strength need be feared if a dilute solution of formaldehyde be left standing in an open vessel, but it would be wiser to cover it closely, or, better still, to mix only as much at one time as is needed then.
