GENEROSITY.

000000000000 The band was playing "A Summer Night In Munich." Out on the terrace colored lights hung like globes of fire, and seats, cunningly placed in secluded corners, invited repose to the dancers. There in the quivering moonlight stood Rose-mary Maitland. Her companion looked at the sweet face half turned away from him. Presently he spoke.

"It may be a long, long time," he said softly. And the music died away into a distant echo-it seemed of pain. "Will you spare a thought for me sometimes?" "I shall often think of you," she answered simply.

"Will you give me a flower?" he said and turned to the flower border, filled with quaint, old fashioned plants—laven— "hoy's love," "balm" and a host of

"What would you like?" she asked. And then with a sudden impulse she picked off a piece of an old fashioned plant and offered it to him.

"There's rosemary for remembrance," she said a little unsteadily.

And as Jim Duncan took the little pungent smelling sprig he kept the hand in his. Surely the hour was come."

"Rosemary," he said, "Rosemary, will you remember me? I love you. Darling, won't you speak to me?" "What do you want me to say?" she whispered, and the light in her sweet blue eyes was quite enough for Jim Dun-can, for he took her in his strong arms and murmured all these sweet things which come with all the force of first

"It may be only a year," he said, "or it may be longer. Can you wait so long, Rosemary?"

Her answer, spoken softly enough, was distinctly, "Yes." "I shall keep this," he said, putting the little green sprig carefully away in his pocket, "and when I am far away, dar-ling, that will tell me of 'Rosemary, for remembrance." "Rosemary, Rosemary! Where are you,

A tall, dark eyed woman stood beside them, her sheeny satin train sweeping over the grass. Diamonds glittered in "We are going now, dear," she said, looking keenly at Rosemary.

"Ah, is that you, Mr. Duncan? So you are really going abroad?" "Yes, for a year. I hope not more. I shall hope to come and see you before we sail, Mrs. Maitland." "We should have been delighted to see you," she said, "but I am afraid we leave town tomorrow for the country. Come, Rosemary." She swept away, followed by her daughter. And as they stood in the brilliantly lighted hall Jim found time to whisper a last goodby in Rosemary's ear.

"Goodby, darling," he whispered as he ders. "I shall write to the colonel and you too. Tell me you love me, dearest." "You know I do. Jim."

Mrs. Maitland glanced curiously at he daughter as she sat still and silent in the corner of the brougham.
"Silly child!" she reflected. "Thank beaven I was in time to nip the thing in She said nothing, however, to Rose mary on the subject, and they parted in silence.

It was a week later. Rosemary still watched feverishly for the postman, happily unconscious of the fact that Mrs. Maitland had had also a deep interest in the post box and its con tents, for one morning she had, on carefully examining the post box, selected two letters, one addressed to Colonel Maitland and the other to Rosemary. These she put in her pocket for further examination, after which they found a least region place in the fire

"H'm! Troops sailed yesterday for the Cape," observed the colonel one morning at breakfast. "Hello! Young Duncan went out, I see. Did you know he was "Well, my dear, Jim-Duncan is a very nice young fellow," he ventured to say, "and if the child likes him"—

"Really, George, you are quite absurd!

Why, the boy has scarcely enough to keep himself. Besides, you know Sir Jasper Carew is only waiting for a little encou agement to come to the point."

Time passed—time which waits for no man-and as each day slipped by and not a word came from across the sea Rose-mary grew more and more hopeless. She was forgotten, and the sprig of rosemary was doubtless lying unheeded in the fire or had floated away on the rolling waves. The June sun beat down fiercely on the green meadows of Padstow Court as green meadows of Padstow Court as Rosemary walked slowly down the avenue to meet the old postman. He gaye her one letter—a thin, foreign letter, with a blurred looking postmark. Had it come at last? With trembling finares she tore it open. There lay, dry and discolored, a sprig of rosemary, a mute reproach.

Dear Miss Maitland—My dear old chum, Jim Duncan, asks me to write these few lines, which he cannot write himself. His hours are numbered, and, stricken with fever, he has not long to live. He begs me to inclose the sprig of rosemary and to remind you—though without reproach—ther it was given for remembrance. He has never forgothin you. I am, yours sincerely.

RUPPAR MOORE.

A little gasping sob escaped her lips. He was ill—dying—dead! What did he mean by reminding her of What did he mean by reminding her of the rosemary for remembrance? He had not remembered—and now? With vacant, aching eyes she looked again at the little withered sprig and took her way homeward. In the hall Mrs. Maitland met her,

and, in horror at the sight of the white,

agonized face, she exclaimed:
"Rosemary! What is it?"
The girl held out the letter with shaking fingers.
"Don't speak to me." she said hoarsely.
"I can't bear it yet. Mother"—with a wild cry—"mother, my heart is broken."

It was a year later. Time, the great healer, had laid a gen-tle hand on Rosemary's wild sorrow, hushing it to rest, soothing the dull agony. Still, there lay in a little drawer of her bureau that envelope, with its sprig of faded rosemary, and the faint odor never failed to bring back the old, sad

Sir Jasper Carew was very tender. his honest devotion. One day he told her of his love. Very gently, very tenderly, all the devetion, silent and strong, of years' growth he laid at her feet.

"I have always loved you, dear," he said. "Is there no hope for me at all?"

Rosemary looked away into the sun-

"Listen to me first before I answer your question," she said softly. "I know I can trust you, and I should like to tell you all. There was some one else and he went away. I never heard any thing of him till last year, when one day I heard from a friend of his that he was dying-dead. I thought he had forgotten me, but he had not. I loved him, and I can never love in the same way again. She paused, and Jasper took her hands In his.

"Rosemary," he said, and his voice rembled. "I will be content with very little love if you will only let me take eare of you. Will you be my wife?" Rosemary looked at him steadily. "If you can be content," she said soft-

It was a strange, an almost pathetic wooing, but Jasper Carew felt amply rewarded for his years of faithful devotion and patient waiting.

It was September when they were all at Padstow Court again. The wedding was to take place in December, and Mrs. Maitland, quite in her element, was very busy arranging all those hundred and one details which must attend the marriage of an only daughter.

Jasper felt that his cup of happiness was full to the brim as he and Rosemary sauntered slowly homeward one glorious evening.

Passing along a green lane, they heard footsteps behind them, and a voice at their side said courteously:
"Could you kindly tell me the neares way to Padstow Court?"

They turned and faced the speaker At the sight of him Rosemary staggered back, pale to the very lips, while he started forward with a cry. "Rosemary!"

With all the deadly rapidity of a flash of lightning Jasper Carew realized what had happened, and he saw at once that all his dreams of future happiness were at an end. He turned away for a me ment, for at first the sight of his alas, his no longer) Rosemary lying sobbing i Jim's arms was too much for him to wit ness, till at last Rosemary remembered all and she turned pleadingly to Jasper. "Jasper," she pleaded, "Jasper, forgive

-forgive me! me—forgive me."
"Dear," he said hoarsely, "I see it all.
"And now"—he turned to Jim and held out his hand—"welcome home, Duncan," he said. "You see, I know who you are. Roseniary, you can do one thing for me-make him happy."

"God bless you!" said Jim as he wrung his hund. "I can never repay you for this act of more than generosity. Take her in," said Jas glancing at Rosemary. "We shall meet again presently." He left them abruptly, and the lovers, left alone, found time for mutual ex-planations. Jim had almost miraculously recovered and, having been sent up country, bad been detained abroad for some Matters thus arranged, by Sr Jasper's special wish the marriage was not de layed, and the only alteration was that he took the place of the "best man" at his own request. Mrs. Maitland was sorely analoged at this change, but at the special intervention of Providence, as the colonel called it, she could say nothing, though Jim guessed that she had had a hand in the disappearance or nondeliv-ery of those letters.—Woman's Life.

Europe and the Arab. The conquest of Egypt by the Arabs was not the least important phase of that colossal wave of expansion which fills one of the most wonderful chapters in history. That great and sudden rush of an obscure and numerically insignificant nation to the eastern and western boundaries of the Roman empire and almost to the limits of the orbis veteribus notus is the most amazing event of the second millennium of our era.

There seemed no adequate reason why the flood of conquest should stop when and where it did. The zeai for God and his prophet was still hot when the Sar-acens were turned back at Tours, and, though Europe may justly be proud of her Charles Martel, we may be sure that if the Arabs had really been minded to plant a mosque at Paul's Cross, where a shivering muezzin should chant the call to prayer in a London fog, the army of the Franks could not have stopped them. It was not Tours alone that saved England from becoming a province of the caliphate. We must also thank our enviable climate. The Arab realized that in the lands of the Hyperboreans there was no sun worth basking in.—Professor Stanley Lane-Poole in Longman's.

A Place For the Staff. "Did you ever hear," asked one "Black Jack's" men who lives in Chic go, "how General Logan once met his match right here in Chicago? It was just before the capture of Savannah, and General Logan and three members of his staff went down to the railroad station to take the train for the east on his way to rejoin his command. The general, walking a little ahead of his staff officers, started to enter a car, but was stopped by an Irish attendant. "'You'll not be goin in there,' said the Irishman to the general. 'And why not?' said General Logan. "'Because that's a leddies' car, an no an'il be goin in there widout a leddy. there you kin t ave ef ye want it."

but where all I put my staff?

"Be a yer staff, answered the Irishman. No you an take the seat an stick yer staff out of the windy."

CUTICURA Speedily Cures.

My mother has been a victim to ulcers from varicose veins for thirty-five years. Eleven of these terrible sores have existed at one time on the limb affected. Excreciating pain and intense suffering were endured, with all sorts of remedies on trial and numberless physicians' calls and prescriptions applied, but all practically with but little benefit. However, at last the remeckal agent was found ir Currcura (ointment), which surely proved its weight in gold, alleviating pain and causing healing processes to commence and a cure speedily effected. She has, also, used Currcura with marked benefit in erysipelas of the face and eczema. The Currcura Soar, also, has established a record only as the best cleansing, purifying, and healing in its nature, having proved itself a most excellent and valuable surillary to the Currcura (ointment).

I would remark that this tectimonial is entirely unsolicited, being a voluntary contribution for humanity's sake, and the commendation of the Currcura Remedies to the fullest confidence, being satisfied of their purity, genuinsness, and almost miracles wrought.
