Aunt Zina Remembers Cardston's Birthday

Salt Lake City, June 3, 1907.
Dear Old Cardston:

Twenty years ago today you were born! Oh, how it stormed! Yet we were happy and made the best of our trying circumstances. Brother and sister Matkin took dinner with us. I say "us" advisedly for dear Uncle John and Aunt Mary Woolf were "playing keep house" with us and one tent protected all our devoted heads. We met brother and sister Anderson. He told us it had been storming "just a leetle" and sister Anderson said, "Gosh I should say it had." We told them what a time we had crossing the St. Mary's river and showed them the boat we had expected to use but how our Heavenly Father sent this cold storm and the water in the river receded so that, under the guidance of the North West Mounted Police, we had crossed in safety.

When Aunt Mary told her little boy, Wilford, that this was "home," he looked forlorn and broken-hearted and bursting into tears exclaimed, "Well ma, where are the houses," and his echo answered "Where?"

Bishop Farrel poked his head into the tent (that was all he could get in, were so full) to borrow our axe. He joked us women folk about "our tongues" getting tired—which, of course, was no joke at all. But, lo and behold! The rain ceased and a beautiful carpet of snow covered the earth. When all had retired, I raised a corner of our wagon cover and peeped out wondering what it was that was making such a dreadful noise. I soon discovered that it was only uncle Rhue Miles in the act of snoring. Soon Brother Card joined the midnight chorus and it really seemed that I had only just fallen asleep when uncle Rhue's rooster began crowing for daylight. Well, "the evening and the morning were the first day."

The long days were full of work, work, work! Soon we were surrounded with all we needed for a summer camp. Sterling erected a bowery over my tent door, the wagon was put at the back of the tent for a bed-room, so that I had three apartments. The ladies in camp began calling on each other and one afternoon when we were out strolling we were called back to meet two ladies who lived on a ranch nearby. We had no idea that civilization had so soon reached us. Mrs. Shaw and her charming daughter Jessie were the visitors who came to extend the hand of fellowship and right glad we were to meet them. From that day to this we have been friends.

Soon we had "garden truck" ready to eat and what might have appeared a summer picnic to the casual observer, soon developed into a stern reality. Brother Leavitt built a log cabin at the foot of the hill. Others soon followed so that when winter came we were all housed. Then came the ever true spirit of pioneer life. We must have industries. A grist mill made flour for us and year by year other necessities were added.

Prest, Card's energy and desire to bless the people was ever prominent. Soon we had a steam thrasher, a saw mill, a cheese factory, a co-op store, a canal, sheep industry, Implement Store, big-land deal, etc. These were all started by our people and every encouragement was given to those things calculated to improve and develop the country and its resources. Our money went like water on the sand and years have come and gone. Success and failure have added their quota to our human experiences.

Cardston has more real improvements and up-to-date, live progressive comforts than any other town her age and size I know of.

Your latest "plunge" for light and water is immense. STAY WITH IT. Your new tabernacle can materialize this year and next by the people just acting as a unit. All plan, as usual, to save every cent possible to come back to Utah on a visit. Now let me tell you what I think would be the best,
