Wha's happy fireside is her pride, Wha fears the Lord, and does her duty, And cares for nothing else beside. Auld Time himsel's charmed wi' the

He maks his mark, but maks it licht Having finished this digression And, aiblins, worn your patience bare, I'll tell a story o' your fourteen Lads and lasses—brave and fair.

It was a glerious Sabbath morning, The incense sweet of shrub and flowe The incense sweet of shrub and no Filled the air with balmy fragrance, Birds with music filled the bower.

The sun shone with brilliant splendor. Which bathed the world in dazzling brightness, Filled the heart with pure delight.

His beams danced merr'ly on each ripple Of the murmuring, crystal stream, Producing such a scene of beauty, As Mirza saw not in his dream

When from the ramparts of old Bagdad He viewed those peaceful, happy isles, Where all was pleasure, joy and glad-Where Nature smaled her sweetest

On such a morning as I speak of, I went to see yourself and dame; Full of life and stir year house was, For a' the fourteen were at hame.

Into a room your guid wife put them So I might see them are and a When counted, only twal were prese Missing were the ither twa.

"Losh me," said she, "I had forgotter I set the twa this blessed morn To keep the birds and graws frae pick ing
Up the taties and the corn." Said I, "The heat is really blistering, A pair o' auld brooks stuffed wi' stray

Dangling frae a pole wad frighten Greedy birds and hungry craw." "The bairns mak' better tatic hogles, It's no hard work, and keeps them

And faith you'll fin' them far mair plenty
Than auld or new breeks roun' this hoose."

Lang may yoursel' and guid wife flou ish,
And see one hundred o's at least,
And when you colorede that number
May I be there to join the feast.

Noo children's children swarm arou you, The Tatie Bogles bidding fair To furnish each another fourteen.
O'lads and lassies for their share.

My story has been plain and simple, Just like oor parriach an' oor kail. Yet it may serve to 'point a moral,' If it won't 'adorn a tale.' Thrifty, frugal, true and honest, Sealskins are very nice things, especially in a winter such as this has been, but it is to be feared that not many of their fair wearers know of how much suffering the acquisition of their warm and becoming coats has been the cause. It is said that there are thirty-six vessels, chiefly from Soctland, who go for seals to the Island of Jan Mayan, latitude 73° north, and that they always go at the season when the youngseals are most abundant. The reason is that the little creatures are left by the mothers, who go in search of food, and the harpooners lia in wait near the groups of young. the creatures are left by the mothers, who go in search of food, and the harpooners lie in wait near the groups of young, knowing the old ones will return to them. When they do so, a regular scene of butchery takes place, and the little seals, whose skins are not worth taking, are left to starve to death. Their cries under these circumstances, are described as heart-rendering, being almost undistinguishable from those of infants. Mr. Frank Buckland is agitating busily for an international treaty to secure a time of rest and immunity from attack for the seals while they are raising their young. There is a selfish argument in favor of such a treaty, as well as a SOMETHING NEW!

At the point where the roads separate, I give my mare her head, leaving her free to make her choice, and on week days she will go straight to the depet; and on Sundays, she goes, of her own free will, to the church; I never knew her to fail me yet. It puzzled me for a long time to learn how she could know any difference in days; and I have come to the conclusion that she reasons from facts—facts connected with everyday life. If there is anything in this world particularly disagreeable, it is to undertake to drive a pair of horses which do not match in their speed and way of geing. No matter how near alike they may look. If they do not drive well together, nothing else makes any difference. Each horse may be valuable, single; but so poorly mated as to make them both worthless.

We have seen many persons matched just like such pairs of horses. They are very well in themselves, separately considered, but most unfayorably linked together. They never travel the same gait, or in the same direction.

We have often thought that the acquaintanceship between such persons was an unfortunate event. They were well enough off alone. Together they are doomed to be always miserable. What a pity that they should ever have met! Merchants, Goderich.
