QUOITING HAS FLOURISHED IN LONDON MANY YEARS

Father of Present Champion Was | told him about a night spent at the old grounds on King street, when Jim-Leader in Early Days.

The success of Mr. James S. Bellwho, by the way, must be surprised at being referred to by any other name than Jimmy-in bringing the quoiting championship of Canada and the $150 gold medal, which goes with it, to London, has stirred up some of the old-timers even more than the younger enthusiasts of his own day.

"Ah," said one of them to The Advertiser today, "twould be a proud man his father would be today if he were here. There never was a man who was a more thorough sport than that same man-Jimmy's father." The sentiment will find many a response in London among all who remember the old times, the good old days when amateur sport flourished at its best, when the Great Western Railway men of this city had among them athletes who were famous all over the country, but who were not so famous that the champions of Hamilton, another home of good sport, hesitated about coming to contest with them, to the delight of great crowds which the contests never failed to attract. Those were indeed the good old times, and it is to be feared that in this instance it is not the dourness of age which inspires some of the contestants of those days to say that sport now is not what it once was.

RAILWAY MEN ATHLETES. The railway men at that time were the athletes of the city-fine brawny men from Cumberland, and Durham, and the hills of Scotland, sprinters, jumpers, pole vaulters, wrestlers. and, first, last and always, quoiters. The centers of the sporting world at that time for the people of London and all the country hereabouts were the picnics which the railway men held the peace were this morning further at Waubune and Port Stanley. Who that remembers them shall say that the picnics of the present day equal these in the glory of their contests, in feats of skill or strength or endur-ance, and most of all in the tremendous interest and excitement occasioned by them?
