Very Few Failed To Answer Appeal

Buy a Rose?" Answered By Dive For Pocket Or Purse.

[By One of the Sellers.] "Buy a rose sir?-it's in aid of the preventorium." What an interesting record it would make if some sort of an "ometer" had been invented to register the number of times each of the volunteer ladies selling the wild roses on the streets of London Saturday made this appeal. One lay when questioned was sure she had asked at least several thousand people, others thought they would be talking "roses" in their sleep. Be that as it may, the question was asked, and answered most satisfactorily by the citizens of London, as the ever increasing weight of the collection boxes went to show. Perhaps the first thing every worker did upon rising Saturday morning was to view the weather. And for once the weather man was kind. Bright and early the volunteers took their places on the street corners and other spots that suggested a favorable sale, all rejoicing at the sunshine and delightful

One certainly meets with all sorts and conditions of people in an enterprise of this nature. Quite apart from the personal interest which each seller felt in the object of her sales, the preventorium, arose a secondary interest in studying the various samples of human nature exhibited upon hearing the appeal "buy a rose." And right here one might utter the trite saying that it is in many cases impossible This attractive model is cut with waist to judge the hearts of people from portions, and a yoke that combines a their exterior. Gruff-looking men, would soften and smile and make a dive for their pockets at once, when fords ample protection for the dress approached. Grim, hard-worked woworn beneath it. WOMEN SHOULD STUDY

Mire. Hughes, of Toronto Urges This Upon Members of Women Teachers' Guild-Then Be

Ready to Vote. Members of the Women Teachers' Guild were the hostesses of a most delightful banquet in the Alexandra School on Saturday afternoon, when Mrs. James L. Hughes, wife of the chief inspector of public schools, of Toronto, was the speaker and guest Mrs. Hughes chose for her subject "Democracy and Suffrage," stating that democracy was no new term, but had existed since the time of Plato and the ancient Greeks. It had been working like leaven for many centuries, until today it had reached the women of the world. "It is a divine power working in humanity. It is God Himself. Today we see a definite end, and that is suffrage. In all ages every great movement has had many This great feminist movement is but one of the many that re permeating the world today, but all will ultimately combine to form a great democracy." "We women have always been property. The men are our masters. The very fact that a married woman wears wedding ring shows that we are We hear a good deal bound to a man. about women's inferiority. If you get the vote, what are you going to do? There is a great deal more involved in suffrage than merely voting. Are we women ready for it? Are we capable of discussing the great questions of government necessary to our country? Study Great Issues. Mrs. Hughes, although an ardent suffragette herself, pointed out that the danger in women having the ballot was their tendency to sentimentalcieties, and for lectures dealing with ize too much; women would be more apt to include minor reforms as planks in their platform rather than great issues, she stated. Woman's work in the home was not that of fifty years ago.
