G. T. P. RAILWAY TO BE COMPLETED NEXT YEAR

A. W. Smithers of the Grand Trunk Pacific, said yesterday to the Montreal Star:—

"It can now be announced with certainty that the Grand Trunk Pacific will be completed next year, and there will be no let up on building operations while there is a mile of steel to lay between the eastern and western terminals."

Mr. Chamberlain is going over some of the branches and the main line to the end of the track, and until he returns from his western trip, Mr. Smithers will not proceed to London.

"When I return," he said, "it will be as one fully sharing the confidence of Canadian and British friends of the enterprise, as to its bright future. As to the west, Prince Rupert will, of course, continue to be our line down to Vancouver, although it will not be built by the company. Friendly interests are looking after the road, and after its construction we will lease and operate it as a much-needed branch."

DEAF, DUMB AND BLIND: NOW A LECTURER

Helen Keller addressed three thousand people in Tremont Temple, Boston, some time ago, all sitting spell-bound and realizing that they were witnessing one of the modern miracles and a demonstration of what one of the greatest surgical specialists has termed the most wonderful individual achievement in education, the education of the deaf, dumb and blind girl.

HOW LANGUAGE CAME TO GIRL.

Starting without method and with hardly any idea of how best to approach her task, Mrs. Macy said she had finally decided that it was best to let the child do what she seemed inclined to do. The teacher entered into the spirit of the child's life and aided her in all efforts to find out things. She told of how a doll she brought in her trunk for Helen Keller was the first thread in the bond of sympathy, and how she taught the child by the manual method to say "doll," and from this first word by slow and tedious steps she taught her word after word meaning some physical object, until one day the child's consciousness seemed to be awakened to the real meaning and significance of words. They were at a pump getting a drink of water, and the pupil felt the water coming from the pump, and the process of drawing the water from the ground became impressed on her mind. With the impression came the realization of the use of words.

Helen Keller learned thirty-two new words that day, and from then on the world in darkness became a living reality through words that she was constantly learning.

Her work with Miss Keller and the results obtained, said Mrs. Macy, proved that "a mentally sound child is compelled by some inward force to express itself."

Mrs. Macy explained the difficulties Helen had to master to comprehend speech. The pupil placed her thumb on the speaker's throat, two fingers on the lips and one on the nose. In this way she got the guttural, the labial and the nasal sounds. Then the real task came in imitating by her own unused vocal organs these movements of the throat, lips and nose. Her voice lacks vibration, but even here she is continually gaining. She has been helped much in this respect by Charles White of the New England Conservatory of Music.

HER FIRST ADDRESS.

Miss Keller's appearance on the platform was the signal for an enthusiastic outburst of applause. She was dressed in white and carried a bouquet of pink carnations. "I am glad to stand before you in love and fellowship. I cannot tell how you look, but I feel a loving kindness in you and it makes me happy," she said. "We are all bound together in a love for each other and the success of our movement and our lives depends on this love for each other. Every one of us has the right to make the most of our lives—of the lives which God has given us."

"A ray of light has touched the darkness of my mind. I was blind, now I see; I was deaf, now I hear; I was dumb, now I speak. The hands of others have wrought this miracle in me, and it has also come through the love of God."

LIFE SHOULD BE FILLED WITH MELODY.

Most of us do not use or appreciate the senses or the mind God has given us. Life should be filled with melody. We are blind to all the pretty ways of children. But the senses alone are not enough. It is only when united with imagination, and thought and feeling, that the senses acquire full value. Can you see the splendor of the sunset? Can you look up at the stars without emotion? I have never been able to see these wonderful fires in the sky, except through my imagination; but the starless night of blindness has its wonders. The wind on my cheek touches my imagination. There is a divinity that can only be felt through the imagination and through courage. Love can read asunder the iron gates of darkness. Devotion breaks through the high walls of pride and ignorance. The world is full of love."

ANSWERS QUESTIONS

Placing her hand on Mrs. Macy's face, Helen Keller then answered questions from the audience. Mrs. Macy repeated the question orally. Helen repeated it orally after Mrs. Macy, then answered the question. Mrs. Macy asked: "Doesn't it make you feel very old to stand on this platform?"

Miss Keller—"No, it makes me glad because it brings back memories of friends who have been so good to me." Mrs. Macy—"It makes me feel old as Methuselah, because from this platform I spoke my valedictory twenty-six years ago."

Helen—"I spelled my first words on this platform. The years flow by so quickly."

Mrs. Macy—"Are you a real Socialist or only a parlor Socialist?"

Helen—"A real Socialist."

Mrs. Macy—"What kind of a Socialist did you say you were?"

Helen—"A sure enough one."

Mrs. Macy—"I know there is something wrong about Socialism, if I could only find out what it is."

Helen—"Please let me know what you find out what it is. The lazy ones won't get all the cake under Socialism as they do now."

A voice in the audience—"Can you feel the applause?"

Helen—"Yes."

A voice—"What is the first thing you can remember?"

Helen—"My mother."

A voice—"Do you believe God is love?"

Helen—"Yes, indeed."

BRITAIN HAS DOUBTS.

The cream of British marksmanship is represented annually at the Busby meeting where volunteer-soldiers from all parts of the country, and from the Colonies, shoot off for pride of place in the various competitions, the greatest of which is, of course, the King's Prize, says London Ideas.

This is a time in which the question naturally arises: Is Britain doing as much as it should do to foster and encourage the art of rifle shooting. The answer is in the negative.

"Teaching the young idea how to shoot" is a phrase which has lost much of its practical significance, and it is astonishing (writes an Ideas investigator) that so many parents, who would be extremely annoyed if you called them unpatriotic, object to their boys handling a rifle on the ground that it produces a desire to kill. As a matter of expediency and precaution every boy ought to be made acquainted with firearms, for the chances are that he will, in his ignorance, one day kill himself. Rifle shooting is a sport just as football, cricket and tennis are sports, and thousands of youngsters could be trained annually through their own desire to excel as marksmen if they had greater facilities and more official encouragement. Other nations realize the value of marksmanship—in 1893 France provided instruction in rifle shooting for boys of ten years and upward in the primary schools. During 1908 she spent £20,000 for ammunition alone for schoolboy rifle clubs. The National Union of Shooting Societies of France has something like 2,300 associated societies, with a total membership of 300,000.

Canada insists upon a course of marksmanship as part of her public school curriculum. Australia annually appropriates £100,000 for her reserve force of 50,000 civilian riflemen, and railways carry free of charge rifle club members to and from rifle ranges. All the public schools are the proud possessors of corps, the total membership being 40,000, which is supplied with arms, ammunition and instruction by instruction by the Government free of cost.

All the universities and public schools in Hungary have a course of rifle practice and maintain camps of instruction for them.

In Sweden even the smallest villages have their rifle ranges, and although the population of the whole country is only about five and a half millions, there were over 148,000 active riflemen in 1911. Every year the Government allows over £40,000 for civilian rifle practice, and three years ago there were over two thousand rifle clubs, with a total membership of 130,000.

Little Switzerland, with a population of only three and a half millions boasts of no less than 2,300 rifle ranges, and 3,500 shooting societies, containing 214,000 members, and Italy, Greece, and Austria have not been slow to realize the importance of rifle practice and are keeping pace with their neighbors in car-marking annual grants for this purpose.
