

"How the little lady won the Arab outcast youngsters to school How she and Miss Cameron, a kindred spirit, who had joined her, with their own hands taught the outlaws to make doors, windows, and sashes for the houses, how to plough and garden, are all stories in themselves.

"When a salary at last came from the Church and the Reserve was finally granted the outcasts by the Government, the old chief came to her, 'Miss Baker,' he said, with a puzzled look, drawing a circle on the ground with his cane, "If we build on the new reserve here"—pointing to the rim of the circle—"will you build here in the centre and be our Queen?" And in a letter from one of Miss Baker's friends we are told that when she went back to Prince Albert from her last furlough east, she found the Union Jack flying at the mission. 'Why is the flag flying?' she asked. 'Oh,' answered the Chief, 'you told us to always fly it on the Queen's birthday, and you are our Queen, and you have come back to us, so we fly the flag.'
