

NOTE 8.

Trophimus Fulljames and his wife, Margaret Pringle, had several other sons and some daughters. A son, Robert, and two daughters are now living at Ashleworth, near Gloucester ; John Pringle Fulljames is living at Barrie, Ontario ; another son (now dead), who lived in Toronto ; and a daughter, Margaret, (now dead), who married Captain Balfour, of the Merchant service.

NOTE 9.

My father often told me that his father's family belonged to the Scottish Episcopal Church and attended the chapel in Edinburgh, where they had a pew in the gallery, to which they could get access only by a way they were entitled to through a private house. While being educated at Watson's Hospital he had to attend the Presbyterian Church and he became attached to that form of worship. He has told me more than once of having had his fortune told when he was about six years of age. The nurse who had charge of him took him to one of the closes in the old town of Edinburgh, and to the uppermost story of one of the tall houses, where an old woman told the girl her fortune, and having finished her predictions to the lassie, said : "Noo I'll tell the laddie's fortune." No objection was made, and after going through certain manipulations—whether of cards or tea-cup I do not know—the auld spae wife said : "The laddie will be a sodger ; he will gang awa to a far countrie and marry a wife there, and he'll neer return to Scotland ony mair." I know not whether the auld wife had any insight into the future, in fact I do not think she had, but she certainly made a good guess, for her prediction was literally fulfilled.

NOTE 10.

Captain James Gray entered the army as ensign in Lord Loudon's regiment in 1745. He went into the 42nd, (the Black Watch), in which he was captain, and was at the
