

5.—Now, to advance your real interests, both for time and eternity, rally around the Missionary banner, and cheer on the standard-bearers of the Cross with your support and patronage; and, we say, support the Primitive Methodist wing of Immanuel's army, who have demonstrated the fact that, in proportion to the means bestowed, they have succeeded in converting the masses to protestant Christianity with equal success to any other of the worthy Missionary Societies in Canada West.

6.—We trust, then, that our friends will renew the campaign, this fall and winter, with redoubled energy; and that through the length and breadth of our community the cry of success will ring, and make all the lovers of Zion to be glad.

7.—The Christian Journal, the accredited religious Newspaper of the Body, will continue to publish, as before, every communication from our own, and other Missionaries, and we believe the Missionaries will give the subscribers all the fruits of their labours in ample detail, so that we need not say any more in this Annual Report of the Society's operations, but simply remind our dear brethren, the superintendents of the stations, of the importance of multiplying the number of Missionary collectors, and encourage them immediately to commence their honourable services. To make early all necessary arrangements for holding the Public Meetings at the precise times appointed by Conference—not putting them off to suit other circumstances, which is generally a mistake. To enlist the Sabbath-school and other children to collect with Missionary cards and boxes, and when practicable hold Juvenile Missionary Meetings.

8.—And now, dear friends, in the prosecution of these noble purposes and practical efforts for the happiness of our race, you will have the approval of Jesus, who was a glorious Missionary to our fallen world,—you will have the testimony of a good conscience, and the esteem of the wise and good in all lands. Now, friends of Missions, ponder the claims of this holy charity, this sanctified enterprise, consider your duty in relation to it, pray earnestly and in faith for its progress, and
