PIGMENT FOR PAINT
FROM THE SALTON SEA
San Bernardino, California, March 25—A giant pigment factory established by nature has been found on the shores of Salton Sea—a sheet of water whose didosyncyasies have for a dozen years been a mystery to geologists—on the ring of the Imperial Valley, tucked away in the extreme southeast corner of California.
From slowly bubbling springs on the swampy ground left by the receding waters of this strange inland salt sea forned in the Salton Sink in 1906, comes a peculiar creamy substance which cools and hardens on exposure to the air, and which has been found to be a good pigment, Mixed with oil and heated, this substance makes a high grade of pant.
The pigment is found in green, deep red, and yellow, while yet many other shades may be made by the application of heat. It may be refined by 2 simple and inexpensive process.
The cause of the phenomenon is as yet unexplained. For many years before the filling of the sink with water, in 1906, the area had been a great salt desert.
One suggestion is that the filterno of the water into the e,:rth may have induced chemical action which started the pigment volcano.
