

Until I Took "Fruit-a-tives."

Daughter, Who Had Testified to His Death, Became Hysterical at His Appearance.

New York, Dec. 21.—Three young women became hysterical yesterday afternoon when he was brought into court, and the cries of one of them caused a temporary adjournment of other cases on trial on the same floor in the county court house. The girls were the daughters of Catherine Mary who had testified before Supreme Court Justice DuBois that their father was dead and Julia Tully, who were suing as administrators of the estate of their brother James, who was killed by falling from a truck last March. The truckman and the city of New York were joining in the defense. The girls were crying and begging for administrators of the estate to swear that their parents were dead.

The Corractions Counsel's office in investigating the case heard that the father, John Tully, was not dead, and they found him two days before the case went to court. He was arranged to keep him away from court until the proper moment. One of the daughters was on the witness stand when he was brought into court yesterday afternoon and she screamed as soon as she saw him. She could not control herself and she was thrown by the court officer, and she should not be quoted even in the corridor.

The father said that his daughters knew he was alive. He had been separated from his family for some years, he said, but he had been in the States since Justice Dugro will decide today what to do with the case.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional means. Deafness is caused by inflammation of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and if neglected it will become chronic. The result is deafness. The inflammation can be taken out and the tube restored to its normal condition. This hearing will be decreased, but it will not be lost. It is the result of Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for anyone who can cure deafness by catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Chicago, Dec. 22—Five hundred thousand dollars was appropriated by the executive officers of the International Harvester Company yesterday for Christmas distribution among 2,000 employees of the company. The officials said that the gift is in no sense a Christmas present—merely a sharing of the year's profits of the organization among worthy workers. "Length of service or position will not entitle employees to participate," said George A. Ranney, assistant treasurer. "Special merit is the sole basis for recognition."

Santa Rosa, Cal., Dec. 21.—Luther Burdick, the plant wizard, surprised the members of the California Fruit Growers' association here today by declaring without equivocation that epineas cactus, besides feeding cattle, hogs and sheep, being useful for candy and many other things, was going to revolutionize the automobile tire business and supply paint and whitewash for commercial purposes.

He also added that the same fibre that furnished the excellent substitute for rubber in the tires of the automobile could furnish a substitute for wood pulp in making paper. He said he was already in the market for a large manufacturing company for the introduction of cactus paint in the market.

He said that the fibre of the whitewash made from cactus leaves is absolutely waterproof," he said.

"It will make ten gallons of whitewash. The mucilage of the cactus leaf will not dissolve in water, but it will dissolve in alcohol. This mucilage will take oil colors and is easily handled."

States secret service, Lewis was one of its trusted men. He undertook to hunt down Confederate spies in the northern states. But he did not stay in the north. Major Allen needed some one to go south to find out why Timothy Webster had not been heard from for weeks. Webster, employed by the Confederates as a despatch runner, sent his mail bags to Major Allen. He did not steam open the letters, copied their contents and then sent them to their destination. The service was valuable and

He used to say that the mission was equivalent to a death sentence. There were many men in Richmond who knew him. Some he had run down in New York and New Jersey. He had been arrested in New York and Ford Tracy. But he went. He found Weber in bed sick with rheumatism. He went to work to devise a new mail system, but before he had gone far, Mrs. Morton, wife of the governor of Florida whom he had just thought of, died. He was arrested and condemned to be hanged. After a hard fight the British government succeeded in saving him from the gallows. The next 19 months he spent in prison, and before release came his hair

Frederick Glabe is dead. He is credited with having invented or created the free lunch, but, like all true benefactors of the race, he did not patent the idea.

Glabe came to Chicago long ago, when he was eighteen years of age, and established "Fred's Beer Tunnel" at the west end of the Madison street bridge.

There a table was kept piled high with materials for sandwiches, Glabe maintaining that he could give each customer something to eat and still make a good profit.

The proof that this theory was good he left in estate estimated at $200,000.

was in the box he took up the stool which provided in the dock for the use of prisoners, and hurled it with great force. It flew over the heads of the baristers, just missed the head of the clerk of arraigns, who was bending at his desk, and struck the desk at which Mr. Justice Ridley sat.

Everyone in court was filled with alarm when they saw His Lordship, with his wig and his glasses knocked off, holding his hands to his face. It was thought that he had been badly injured. His Lordship then rose, and by the force of the blow, which struck him, he left the court.

Slowly rising, he left the court and went to his room, where he remained for a few minutes, until he had recovered from the effects of his startling experience. When he returned to the bench it was seen that he had been severely hurt in the eye, and the stool had struck him, and another bruise in the corner of the eye.

The justice ordered that Field, who had meanwhile been taken below to the cells, should be brought back into the dock. Addressing him, he said: "I have told you that you had to go; you might have killed me, but you didn't. I mean it for the witness."

"Your Lordship—I don't know who you mean it for the witness."

"You mean it for him-me. To the dock officer. You had to go. You might have killed my arms and don't let him have the use of them. If necessary, you must tie his arms behind him."

The trial then proceeded, and prisoner was found guilty, and sentenced to five years' penal servitude, to hold "during the pleasure of the court."

It was intended to finish an unexpected sentence of one year and 119 days.

Railway men's Resolution

At a meeting of the Bradford Branch of the Amalgamated Society of Railway Employees, a series of resolutions was put unanimously.

That this meeting, having every reason to believe that such authority is competent to deal with all alleged violations of the railway companies' laws, and that the railway police force organized and controlled by the capitalist classes, outside the jurisdiction of the law, is not supported by the railway companies, is a threat to our liberties and must be serious cause for concern.

That in view of the above, the direction of taking steps to put them on an equal footing; and to secure the immediate formation of a trade union of a trade union policy protection league, whose objects shall be the training and equipping of selected trade union members in the organization of a strike force in a position to meet on equal terms the business of organized capital.

It was decided that this resolution should also be sent to the conference of the railway union at Wakefield for adoption.

Paris, Dec. 23.—In his report on the war estimates, M. Clementel states that when the outstanding orders are executed the war department will have at its disposal 174 aeroplanes. To these must be added forty for the delivery of which the department is now in treaty with the constructors, and, finally, twenty aeroplanes acquired as the result of the military competition. Therefore the official figures for the French aerial fleet in 1912 will be 234.
