POLICEMAN RESIGNS.

POLICEMAN RESIGNS.

It would appear from the action taken by Fred Campbell, who joined the police force on Tuesday last, that a policeman's lot is not a happy one. After one day's service Mr. Campbell remarked to several friends that he did not like the job. Last might he went up to the police station for roll call, but he carried his uniform coat and the rest of his paraphernalla on his arm. He told Chief Clark, when that gentleman inquired why he did this, that he wanted to resign. The chief was not well pleased to hear this from the latest stalwart he had secured, but Campbell did not go on duty last night. The chief says there is a severe penalty for such acts, but he has not yet made up his mind as to what course he will pursue.

POOR BELLE HARLOW. Belle Harlow, a Sheffield street woman, who was beaten about the head so beddy by a man about a year ago that she has since manifested unmistakable signs of insanty, recently went to the hospital for treatment. She came out of that institution yesterday, and last night was found by Sergt. Kilpatrick sitting on a sidewalk on Sheffield street. In reply to the officer's inquiries, the woman said she had no place in which to spend the night. The officer arranged with Lottle Harned to care for the Harlow woman for the night, and an effort will be made today to have her committed to the alms house. Belle Harlow, a Sheffield street

SELLING BRUISED MEAT.

In his apport to the slaughter house commissioners yesterday, the inspector, Dr. Simon sald:—
"During the month an animal-was killed at one of the houses that was so badly bruised that the meat was unfit for food. When I asked the owner what he intended doing with it, he replied that he intended selling it as corned beef. I would respectfully ask for instructions in similar cases."

The commissioners agreed that the inspector should have absolute power in all such matters. If butchers or licensees refused to carry out his instructions or orders, and particularly in such cases as the one referred to in the report, the board would back him up in any action he might take.

One Which Can Be Bought for About $84,000 Per Pound.

(New Orleans Times-Democrat.)

"People do not speak of iron as one of the precious metals," sai' a well-known metallurgist to the reporter, and yet all concede that it is by far the most precious of metals. While we could get along nicely without a gold watch chain or pair of cuff buttons, if forced to do so, there would be some trouble in getting along without iron bridges, iron structural work for houses, ships, machinery and thousands of other things of iron, nails, tacks and the like. On the standpoint of costliness gold is by no means the most precious metal any more, and is not even in the precious class any more. The star metal is gallium, a single grain of which costs $12. In large quantities it can be bought for $44,000 per pound. Calcium, the metal of lime, is not so plentiful either. It costs $10 per gram, or about $5,000 per pound. Gold can be bought for $20 an ounce, or $20 per pound. Compared with gallium, therefore, the latter is
