Why Feed Water Instead of Corn?

MANY dairymen are noticing the poor feeding quality of silage made from tall green corn grown last summer.

Here are actual Quality Figures for Corn at three stages:

Corn Plant	Weight in 10,000 plants (about ½ acre)
	Protein	Starch and Carbohydrates	Fat
(1) When Silks are dry	436 lbs.	2942 lbs.	49 lbs.
(2) Ears formed, Kernels glazing	566 lbs.	7884 lbs.	202 lbs.
(3) Corn ripe for Ensilage	659 lbs.	9268 lbs.	215 lbs.

Purdue Agricultural Experimental Station—Bulletin 175

New York (Genève) Station reports that the corn crop increases in weight about 10,000 lbs. per acre between tasselling and maturity.
Experience shows that you can hasten corn ripening from 10 days to 2 weeks by proper Fertilizing.

These silos with their contents show the relative feeding value of green, partly mature and mature corn ensilage figured on the basis of an equal number of corn plants in each silo.

Corn just past silking stage when frost came

Kernels of Corn
glazed when frost
came

Ears well formed, corn sufficiently ripe for good silage when frost came

You can increase the protein in the silage from 30% to 50% and the Carbohydrates and starch from 168% to 215% by forcing the corn to maturity.

Balance the manure on the corn next summer with 200 to 300 lbs.
Acid Phosphate per acre. If you haven't manure for the corn field use 200 to 300 lbs. of complete fertilizer per acre.

Fertilizers pay in Better Silage Corn. Write for free literature.
