Are We on the Trail?

EDITOR "THE FARMER'S ADVOCATE":
One of the most suggestive impressions of my early life is associated with the track or trail in the woods.

In the pioneer days the cows were allowed to roam in summer with the other cattle in the "bush." One of the cows usually wore a bell, so that their whereabouts could be known, except on occasions when they wandered into the depths of the forest. Then the fun, or mayhap, the trouble, began—the hunt for the cows. Sometimes no trail could be found; in other instances two or three "tracks" might be seen, and one would be quite at a loss as to which of these to follow. To leave the trail might mean to be "lost in the woods." In this case the search was usually abandoned, and the cows left to their instinct to "come home."

"Though reasoning at every step he treads
Man still mistakes his way,
While meaner things which instinct leads
Are seldom known to stray."

By this wonderful instinct the bird from fields and woods afar, returns unerringly to its nest. The honey-bee, laden with nectar from distant flowers, makes no mistake about the location of its storehouse of honey, and all without chart, compass, or course of instruction. Man, with his teachers, science, logic, philosophy, is yet liable to error, and makes many mistakes both along the beaten path and also in his pathless excursions in quest of truth. His geometry, though in itself absolute truth, yet cannot conduct him infallibly to truths or systems outside its own domain. If geometry could fashion government or political economy and formulate it according to its own principle, man would long ago have been on the right trail and have had a government with the party spirit eliminated, and a political economy based on union, such as initiated for Canada.

Long have we wandered in the wilderness of political division, strife and unrest. In division and strife are weakness and decay; in harmony is strength. Are we on the right trail?

Barn Construction.

I am considering building a barn. Have you any books dealing with barn construction, particularly plank-frame? Does the Agricultural Department at Ottawa issue any literature regarding desirable types of barns?

Ans.—The Experimental Farm, Ottawa, has issued a pamphlet describing different types of plank-frame barns and giving specifications for material used. The following books may be secured through this office: "Plank-Frame Barn Construction" 60 cents, postpaid; "Farm Buildings," by Shearer, $1.10.

Blackhead in Turkeys.

What are the symptoms of blackhead in turkeys? What remedy is recommended?

Ans.—The symptoms first likely to appear are lack of appetite, emaciation, inclination to keep away from the rest of the flock, diarrhoea, discoloration of the head as the disease advances. A post mortem examination will usually show the caeca filled with cheesy contents and sunken spots may be seen on an enlarged liver. Remedies do not always prove effective. One teaspoonful of muriatic acid to a pint of drinking water is recommended. Sulphur, 5 grains; sulphate of iron, 1 grain, and sulphate of quinine, 3 grains, administered night and morning, is a mixture sometimes used. This remedy should be preceded and followed by a dose of Epsom salts or castor oil. All birds which show symptoms of the disease should be isolated from the main flock, and it is necessary to put the healthy flock on fresh ground occasionally. The disease germs may remain in the pen or yard for some time, or in the ground on which the birds have fed.
