Yachts For World's Kings.

Yachts For World's Kings.

The launching of the King's new yacht, Alexandria, at Glaegow, by Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyll, marks another notch in Scotland's record as yacht builder to the royal-tiles of the world. The Alexandra is the first of the modern British vessels of this type to be built north of the Tweed, but Scotland can claim to have given of the best her shipbuilders can provide to the rulers of Italy, Spain, Portugal, Roumania, and Siam, while in England yachts, have been constructed for the Czar of Russia, the Emperor of Austria, the King of Greece, and the Sultan of Turkey. There are altogether twenty-two of There are altogether twenty-two of these vessels aftest, and the British isles are responsible for fifteen of them, and Scotland for eleven.

In point of size, the Alexandra-

A Question of Precedence.

By CURRAN RICHARD GREENLEY. Copyrighted, 1907, by Homer Sprague

The limited pulled out from the station as a dash of sleet against the windows gave warning of the increasing storm. Agatha shivered as she pulled the wraps closer about her shoulders. Somewhere out in that

Now her bridges were all burned and every moment speeding her toward the new life out there in the orient. Katharine Laird's invitation to go with them to Japan had reached her at the crucial moment—Japan, dim, dusky dream that all her life had lain just over the border of possibility, and with Katharine and Ellis of all people! Katharine wrote that the appointment was not of sufficient importance to count as a political asset; therefore they would be safe to remain there for years. Then out of the misty premises of the future came the memory of Weldon's face when baldly, brutally, without one softening note of regret, she had told him of her plans and in the next breath a conventional farewell in the presence of the other guests. She had built up the wall of injured pride all too securely, leaving no loophole for belated explanations.

The train settled down to the long run through the open country, and the twinkling lights of villages swept by like fireflies through the stormy darkness. Loneliness engulfed her, and in desperation she sought refuge in her berth, to lie, open eyed, all the sleep-less night, while the certainty of her folly beat in upon her, clearer with each succeeding hour.

Morning found them far out on the deal level of the prairies, with the snow coming down with unabated e :ergy. The engine fought its way through the drifts, but at last the big wheels stood still. Agatha woke up to the fact that something was wrong when the men began to file out of the car. Then a man came down the aisle and stopped at her seat.

"Dick! Dick Weldon!" She was on her feet, both hands entartected and Pick! Dick Weldon!" Sale was on her feet, both hands outstretched and all grievances forgotten in the glad revulsion of feeling. If he had noticed the joy in face and voice, he made no sign as he dropped into the vacant

"We are snowbound and may have to spend the rest of the day here until the plow comes to our relief." The matter of fact tone put confusion to flight and gave Agatha time to find herself while he ran on with an easy flow of commonplaces. "You were on all night?" she venweldon's eyes met hers fairly. "Yes.

I would have made my presence known, but feared you would resent the intrusion; you have kept me so thoroughly out in the cold of late."
"I—that is," and the words failed her. Weldon pulled a magazine from his pocket and handed it to her, the shad-themselves, and the brown head dropped perilously near to Weldon's shoulder as he bent over the girl and the door was fung open and a porter dashed through, yelling as he went: "Is there a doctor on board? There's a child bout to die back there in the way car, and its mother's scared stiff."

Weldon hesitated; then the call to duty overcame. With an appealing duty overcame. With an appealing glance at the girl, "You will hear me giance at the girl, 'tou will hear he afterward?' he was gone.

Agatha turned to the blind whiteness without, her lips trembling.

"It will always be so a secondary

"It will always be so—a secondary consideration." She knew the words he would have said—felt the lost sweetness of the desecrated moment. Hours seemed to pass in the next ten eminutes. The porter returned for Weldon's suit case; then the passengers drifted back into the warm car. There is nothing a setting in contemplating a drifted back into the warm car, There is nothing exciting in contemplating a snowdrift, and they could continue the discussion in comfort. Agatha longed to escape the chatter.

She went through the intervening steepers to the way car, where, at the lend in a little space, she found Weldon. His coat was off, the instrument case open on the floor, and across the dingy velvet of the seat lay the child.

Weldon turned quickly.
"It is malignant diphtheria. Are you

She shook her head, her eyes growing soft with pity as she watched the little head tossing from side to side and heard the choking gasps. For the first time Agatha understood.

"Can I help you?"
The smile that lit his dark face was her reward.

"I would not have asked it, but I would be only too thankful if you would. Get that alcohol lamp started. These instruments must be sterilized." Agatha obeyed, losing all sense of strangeness in the surroundings as Weldon issued his orders and those about each work many party more laboured. With was breasting the storm, his dark face darker still with the pain that her words had inflicted. Even so, let him go since it had to be a question of precedence between her love and his profession. She recalled the night that she had excused herself from her hostess' box party to remain at home for Weldon's call, only to sit alone in the deserted drawing room, and he had not even troubled to send an excuse. That was the beginning of the end. and don't let a thought of his suffering trouble you." Then to the women who were crowding around, "Take the mother to the other end of the car and keep away from here."

The baby throat was bared, and the knife flashed in Weldon's hand—another flash, "The sponge," and the steady fingers pressed the wound apart, "Now the tube and place your fingers here." Agatha obeyed, blind and deaf to all but Weldon's low toned command. The slow minutes dragged out a lifetime, while she stood there and Weldon sutured and bandaged, the play of the strong white fingers holding her fas-

"Look!" He pointed to the small face on which the awful blue gray hue was giving place to a natural pallor. "He is breathing easily now, but the next question is the nursing. You see the mother?' and he nodded toward the tawdry bundle of shabby finery that occupied the center of the sympa thizing group. "He will die unless he has the best of care. Poor little wretch! It may be a cruel kindness to written it in hay be up to the forgets all that in the heat of battle." He smiled down into her eyes. The baby stirred and moaned, and in the girl's heart the instinct of all motherheod roused in answer. "Do you think she would let us take him and care for him?"

"Us"—Weldon's heart gave a mighty leap—"let us? She will have to, if I say so, but you"—
"Never mind about me. I—I want to."

When the small patient awoke to his when the small patient awoke to his suffering, there was little time for sentiment. During the long day, while they lay snowbound, Weldon and Agatha battled for the child's life. Then the train sped on its way, while the mother whiled away the interval with ineffectual trips from car to car until Weldon bade her stay away altogether until the crisis was passed. He wired ahead for an ambulance, and they went direct to the hospital. The worst was over, and they could safely leave him to the nurses, but Agatha's eyes were wet as they passed out into the small thing that had depended so utterly upon her care.

small thing that had depended so utterly upon her care.
Weldon took the seat beside her as he gave the order, "To the Palace hotel." The Lairds were stopping there.
His hand closed over hers. "Agatha,
it was just such a case as this that child of a widowed mother, and it

The brown eyes met his, bright through the mist of unshed tears, "Now I understand."

"Now I understand."

Cleaning the Skin. "Have you seen that article on Japan? It may interest you." Then he van- ished behind his paper.

Agatha picked up the magazine, the gray blur between her eyes and the page threatening to overflow.

Cleaning the Skin, it cannot be efficiently cleansed by water alone; hence the morning cold bath, which is delightfully tonic and invigorating to those with whom it agrees, is a debusion and a space so few search. In point of size, the Alexandra—so named, of course, in honor, of the Queen—is by no means exceptional. It is 300 feet in length and will displacement of the German and Russian imperial yachts. In fact, its only exceptional feature will be found in its engine rooms, for, since it is the first ship of the class to be built since the advent of the curbine—its mmediate predecessor being the Victoria and Albert, designed in 1886—tt is materially the first to be equipped with that system of propulation. It will, nevertheless, have a moderate speed, only seventeen knots being anticipated, which is lower than that of any other seagoing royal yacht in existence.

Agatha picked up the magazine, the gray blur between her eyes and the gray blur between her eyes and the safe thought. "No one asked him to cone." But she stole a look at the dark, intent face, and their cyes met. The paper fell to the floor between them. "No use, dear lady, I confess. I followed because I could not stay behind."

"What! Left all those wonderfully interesting patients just to follow me? This belated interest is simply amazing." But the heightened color and the laughter deep in her eyes belied her words. Under cover of the magazine, the gray blur between ther store asked him to cone." But she stole a look at the dark, intent face, and their cyes after the cold bath undoubted by assists in the removal of the dried secretions from the skin, but there is still need of some substance which will not stay behind."

What is conscience is said the laughter deep in her eyes belied her words. Under cover of the magazine, the gray blur between the stole a devision and a snare so far as efficient cleansing properties are concerned to a devision and the safe the devision and the state to be still need of some substance which will not stay behind."

What is conscience is and the brown head dropped perilously near to Weldon's hand sought and found hers. They had the car practically to the skin the advent of the skin the advent of the magazine, the gray had th

The Hammerhead Shark.
One of the strangest sharks, and, in deed, one of the oddest looking creatures in the world, is the hammerhead tures in the world, is the hammerhead—an excellent name, for its head 's cylindrical, with a width two or three times as great as the length. The eyes are set at the outer angles of the head and can thus look up and down at will. There are three rows of trangular white teeth in each jaw. This voracious fish reaches a length of fifteen feet, and, though there is little danger of its attacking a living swimmer, it will at least devour a dead body. One, eleven feet long, which was killed at Sag Harbor, had eaten portions of a man and his clothing. Small hammerheads have been caught in New York bay, and several four foot specimens in Hell Gate.—New York Post.

Quaint Designs In Imported Candle Shades For the Table.

WORK FOR CLEVER FINGERS.

The Fad For Hand Embroidery and Empire Designs Extends Even to Lamp Shades—Beads Used Both as Fringes and Worked Patterns Are Still Popular.

Not since the days of Chipper and Sheraton whose marvelous "candle tables" and card tables are the models for modern reproductions, have candles and candlesticks been so fashionable as they have been of late, with this difference: Formerly they were used for the lack of better lighting facilities; now they are selected because of their possibilities from a decorative standpoint and because their light is soft and becoming.

In the past generations the only shades used on candles were the globes of crystal or ground glass, which also have returned to favor rewhich also have returned to have te-cently. These are, of course, not feasi-ble as table decorations, so that un-less the candle is left unshaded some softer cover is needed to diffuse the light.

The fad for hand embroidery seems to have extended even to shades, for succession of Lesses.

The Martha M., another vessel which did service in Kipling's volume, was really the Mary N., a well-known schooner from Bucksport, which sunk with all hands on a frozen herring voyage from Newfoundland in the spring of 1902. The We're Here, the centre of the little sea drama which the book embodies, was really the Andalusia, a Gloucester trawler, which sunk somewhere off Sable Island in an equinoxial gale and carried down her whole crew with her. A third of his group to meet this disaster was the Hope of Prague, identified by the fact that "Nick Brady's her skipper, the meanest man on the banks."

So might the category be continued full twenty strong, At least that number have vanished beneath the wave since "Captains Courageous" was written. The last of the fiect he named therein, the Prince LeBoo, went down two years ago, and her disastrous end marked the extinction of all the "hoodbo" fleet as they came to be known, and the raising of the ban which, it was feared, would extend to others of the flotilla engaged in this industry.

"Jonah" Ban Remeved.

What is very remarkable is the fact several of these fetching little creations are cleverly embroidered in floral tions are cleverly embroidered in fioral and empire designs upon silk. The influence of the empire is of course very strong in all decorative schemes at the moment, so that empire wreaths and empire designs of all kinds are found on every object, however small. A very pretty paper shade is of pale green octagon shape, lined with white and decorated very simply with a series of small gold wreaths, joined by conventional loops. At the top and bottom of the shade is a small quilling of gold lace.

Small fluted shades are varied in de sign. Some are very plain, with bead fringe around the edge; others are much decorated with lace, cord and quillings of ribbon. Chiffon flowers are used also; hence one pattern shows without arousing and other tragedies in the trawling fleet have wiped out whole crews whose very names are now forgotten. The point, however, is well taken by the fisherfelk that since the Kipling vessels have all gone to the bottom the percentage of lesses of sinps and men in the Gloncester fleet has very materially lessened, and that the last two years have witnessed fewer of these tragedies than any other season in the history of the New England fisheries for the last half century.
