Child Culture.

The greatness of a country is not found in its trade, but in its production of child life. The wisdom of a country is not to be gauged by its books, but by its care of its children. The defence and safety of a country lie not in its army, but in its schools and other institutions that are designed to enlarge and improve the character of the child. At the base of all civilisation and achievement lies the babe, and wise indeed is the city and the country that recognises the fact. Not the least among these institutions is that of the moder city play-grounds. As the practical result of the child in the assets of civilisation, there are being established more and more open places in the cities where children may engage in healthy and harmless recreation. Like oases in the desert, these green spots are appearing, each with its spring of joy for the refreshment of the children. In many cities may be found great play-grounds, with swings, ball fields and gymnastic apparatus awaiting the boya and girls whape munceles are astistaction of the play instinct is as essential as the satisfaction of the hunger instinct. Man may be made to mount, as some plaintive poet once put it, but the child was made to joy and make marry. The mere idea of discipline as being the thing of imperative importance in the training of the child is wholly wrong and foolish. Not repression, but expression, is the funiamental need. That a child does not work is never as serious as the fact that it does not play, and the truat boy, gamboling col-like out of bounds, has in him more promise than the other boy who mopes through alleys on his way from school.

Children will play. Unless the town of a play for the play instinct is an estimate the child was made to joy and make marry. The mere idea of discipline as being the thing of imperative importance in the training of the child is wholly wrong and foolish. Not repression, but expression, is the funiamental need. white the other classes in some caces have been added to. Although the dates are earlier than in former years the date for the closing of entries is practically the same as last year, viz August 26th, which gives exhibitors as late a date at which to make entries as at previous exhibitions. Any person who have not received copy of the prize list can have same by spplying to the Secretary M. McF. Hall, Half, faz, N. S.

The sward of the arbitrators on the Acadia Ricetric Light plant was open ed on Saturday last. The price found by the arbitrators was $25,83. There has been a great deal of apeculation around town during the past few weeks, but in no case that we have been giving addresses in the canse of was the mount placed as large as this, At a meeting of the Consoil on Wednesday night, it was decided that in view of the excessive amount of the award the recorder he included that the value of the award the recorder he instituted to give notice that on the state of inthe activity will be taken.
