At Hand.
The reign of God, His light and love and joy in glad content I take His guiding hand: In the bright sunshine where I live and move, In this quickening impulse is His kind command.
In Him I am. In Him I move and live; He lives and moves and loves and is in me. Direct my thoughts, dear Father: let me give My heart, my voice, my strength, my life to Thee. Yes, when I choose, I hear my Father's voice, His word my conscience, and His joys my joys— Loving the children of the King's hand; My God is here. His kingdom is at hand.

A Little Child Shall Lead Them.
The fallen Angel picked himself up from the pavement outside the Crown and Compass, where he had been ceremoniously deposited by the barman. He felt indignant, as far as it was possible for a man of his spirit to be so, for he had been hardly tippy at all, nothing to what he had been on previous occasions. But the Crown and Compass had grown tired of him. It was not only the quality, but the quantity of offences that the proprietor objected to. The fallen Angel carefully dusted the knees of his dingy trousers, a pathetically out-of-place precaution, and shuffled off in the direction of St. James' Park. It was a tender spring afternoon, when one felt that the world must surely be young and pure and glad again, as in the days before the first fallen angel writhed his destructive way through the Garden of Eden. The descendant of the first fallen one felt he was out of the picture, for he was not lacking in an artistic sense. He gazed hungrily at the little children, dressed with such lavish care by their proud and loving parents, as they trotted along by the side of their nurses. Not that he had any desire to make a meal of two or three of the plumpest, although he was hungry enough for any extreme; but little children had been a special hobby of his before he had become a fallen angel. The sight of their innocent little faces and robust enjoyment of life brought his downfall more poignantly home to him than anything else. He detested a certain grim enjoyment from lurking about his old abiding places on the chance of meeting someone he had known in the old life. It made him feel like his own wrath, as Jones or Smith or Robinson, with whom he had exchanged passages of witty warfare in the days when he had been the "cutest card" at the Junior Author's club, passed him by, and looked through him, as if he were, never dreaming that the dishevelled rapscallion selling toy balloons in the gutter was the man who had written "Songs of the Joyous Child." But he let his exile from the kingdom of Nursery land very keenly. If he could only feel a little hand in his own more, if he could only guide two little feet here, their first adventurous journey, as he had often done, just once more, perhaps it would not be too late to give up being a fallen angel. That afternoon the theme "I only" seemed to be running through the whole orchestra of the humming life of the bright and busy town. If only he had stuck to his resolution never to write "whispering" again, if only he had recognized the key when he first recognized the key; if only he had stuck to his work his Maker had clearly meant him for, writing for children about children, instead of tilting at literary windmills that had nothing to do with him; if only he had supplied some of the delightful humor in his own successful book to his own case; if he had laughed and busy town and his normal state; if he had stuck back into his normal state; and, oh, God! if only Winifred Drummond had not been so confused. If she had spared him that cold and calculated insult, that portrait of himself as an illustrator's block with the biting acid of her scathing words when he asked her to be his wife; if she had said "Yes" and there had come into her life a new and potent steadying influence, the sight of the two frail little arms stretching out to him in perfect dependence and perfect confidence.

Itching Piles For 27 Yrs.
Despaired of ever getting relief until cure came 3 years ago with use of DR. CHASE'S OINTMENT.
Mr. John Johnson, Cawley, Alta., writes: "Three years ago I was cured of itching piles of twenty-seven years' standing by using Dr. Chase's Ointment. I used to think that death would be the only relief I could ever get. Dr. Chase's Ointment is worth a dollar a box instead of sixty cents. I am earning all the time now and never had from itching and so thoroughly cured every form of piles. 60 cents a box, at all dealers, or Edmondson, Bates & Co., Toronto. Write for a free copy of Dr. Chase's Recipes."
"Inward's Linctum ent for sale everywhere."

denor, the sound of a baby voice framing for the first time that wonderful word, "Dad—"
"Please, I'm lost."
"Thus started his reverie, the fallen angel looked down. The little girl who had volunteered this information to him could not have been more than six years old. She was exquisitely dressed, one of those fairy like little people that you quite expect to see blown away by the first puff of wind, or take flight at the least noise, and he lay to the top of St. James' Palace or whatever neighboring point of vantage they may happen to be.

"What's that?" the little girl asked in an awe-stricken voice.
"A man who writes pretty books like 'Little Lord Fauntleroy' and 'Editha's Burglar.'"
"But had people don't write pretty books?"
"Ah! but you see, I'm not going to be a had person any longer. Now you must cut along. Shake hands, and say 'Good luck to you, Mr. Author.'"
The little girl shook hands very prettily.
"Good luck to you, Mr. Author," she said with a merry little laugh. Then she trotted away.

"The Story of Fluffy" first came out in America, but quickly found a way into many a nursery in England. That was the first book of the "Fluffy" series. Everyone knows them, of course. Grown-up people enjoy them as much as children. Nobody has the least idea who the author can be, though a very clever critic has traced a marked resemblance in some of the most of the books to those in that splendid book "Songs of the Joyous Child." The writer uses the name "Mr. Author" on the title page, but this is obviously a non de plume. There is a little girl at 109 Bayswater road who could throw some light on the subject if she chose.

Lack of Pure Blood

The Cause of Most Illness.—The Cure, Enrich the Blood Supply.
Any illness caused by lack of blood will be benefited and cured by a course of treatment with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills increase the red matter in the blood and enable it to carry to every organ and tissue an increased supply of oxygen, the great supporter of all organic life. This has been proved by cures in thousands of cases not only in Canada but in all parts of the world. More people to-day owe their health and happiness to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills than to any other medicine. One of these is Mr. James Sherr, of Galtland, Alta., who says: "A few years ago I became ill and very weak. Some days I would have a hot dry fever and on others would be bathed in a cold sweat. I grew weaker and weaker until I could do no kind of work and was finally confined to my bed. I tried several doctors, but did me no good, as I was still getting weaker and weaker. I asked the last doctor who attended me to tell me frankly if he could cure me, and he told me my case was so complicated that he did not think he could help me. I told him I had heard a great deal about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and asked if he thought they would help me. His reply was: 'Well, they won't do you any harm and they may help you.' I sent for a half dozen boxes at once and began taking them. After taking three boxes there was no doubt they were helping me, and I continued using them for some time longer. With the result that I am now as strong and hearty and can do as good a day's work as any man in my neighborhood."
These Pills are sold by all medicine dealers or may be had by mail at 50c per box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Forcing the Truth.

"A penny for your thoughts," said he, trying to read her eyes in the dim moonlight.
"They are not worth it," she replied, looking wearily out to sea.
"Then I insist on knowing them," he pleaded, drawing dangerously near.
"You won't be sh-cked?"
"No, indeed."
"Well, then, I—I was thinking of you."
A silence followed, broken only by the distant lapping of the unsympathetic waves.

The Charm of Manner.

Once in a New York department store I wished to buy a cake of soap. The saleswoman showed me a kind of 15 cents a cake that I rather liked. She told me the price and then said: "But there is a kind that we can sell you for a quarter, you see it is a little larger cake, and while not certain, I believe you will like it better, or just as well. I am sure that you want the best."
"Give me four cakes of that last," I said and slapped down a half dollar.
I really wanted one cake of soap, because I had forgotten to put a cake in my valise, and I would be back home in two days anyway, but the girl's charm of manner caught my fancy. She was so gracious, so kind, and so interested in pleasing me and worked in such a delicate little compliment that, in some way, I fell as though she had taken her scissors and snipped off a big red rose, the dew still on it, and handed it to me. Not all salespeople have charm of manner and consideration.
I've had charm of manner and for the other person. Had the girl been in the slightest degree bold, it would have dissipated her charm. She was simply natural, earnest, easy, smiling, kindly.

Burdett on Whiskey.

The battles of this world, my son, have been fought for grander things than free whiskey, the heroes who fall in the struggles for rum, fall short in the neck, and their martyrdom is clouded by the haunting phantoms of the jim jams. Whiskey makes men fight, it is true, but they usually fight other drunken men. The champion of beer does not stand in the temple of fame; he stands in the police court. Honor never has the delirious tremors. Glory does not wear a red nose and Fame blows a horn, but never takes one.—Robert J. Burdette.

There is a convenience in using Estabrooks' Coffee because you can buy it in nearly every store and the quality is the same wherever you buy it. The double sealed tin keeps it in perfect condition until you get it. Buy Estabrooks' Coffee and you are sure of coffee at its best.

Every line in a newspaper costs something. If it is to benefit some individual, he may fairly expect to pay something. You do not go into a grocery store and ask the proprietor to hand you out ten pounds of sugar for nothing, even though the grocer may be a personal friend of yours and the gift might not be a large one. If the beneficiary of advertising does not pay for it, the proprietor has to settle. Nevertheless, many people cannot seem to learn that a newspaper pays its expenses by renting space, and that it is just as much entitled to collect rent for every day that space is occupied as you are for the house you rent to a tenant.

The Newspaper Boys.

In England the newspaper boy is looked upon in some instances as an outcast. For a boy in England to go out of the public schools to sell newspapers, would banish him forever from the society of his fellows. The boy in Canada who sells the newspaper on the streets, is engaged in no honorable occupation. In the United States it is so deemed. A minister in the neighboring Republic, who bears an honored name, made quite an income selling papers. Everywhere on the streets can be seen the sons of merchants, lawyers, doctors, engaged in the work of selling newspapers. One lad has made $3,000 in this way, and employed his own father as his chief clerk. There is nothing dishonorable, boys, in selling newspapers, it is creditable.

Children must have good blood, otherwise they will be puny, sickly, and delicate. If your children are pale, easily exhausted, give them Ferrovin, the invigorating tonic, which is composed of fresh, lean beef Citrate of Iron and pure old Spanish Sherry Wine. Nothing could be more beneficial in such cases.—$1.00 a bottle.

The most successful men in America to-day are those who never lift a wine-glass to their lips.—Edward Bok, Journalist.
