ception proved the rule. It is rumoured that Lord Wodehouse is to be his successor. Some other names have been mentioned, but he is the most likely man for the place. Speculations are also shoat as the propriety of doing away with the post altog ther. At the pre sent time the Irish people, as a whole, would not raise any formidable obbjection to such a project, but in our opinion such a proceeding would be very unwise. The late Joseph Hume, with his parsimonious views, wished to wished to abolish the office, the steamboat, the railway, and the electric telegraph have brought Dublin home to our doors, and if there | fall Impo were any cogency in his arguments 28 years ago there would be more logical force in them now. The Duke of Northumberland, when Lord-Lieutenant, had a salary of £30,000 a year which, as he was rich and wealthy, he reduced to £20,000, and he spent in addition to that unwards of £100,000 areas. The interest of the continuous and Gents, Rid Gloves, a superior that, upwards of £100,000 s year. This is the sort of thing the Dublin shoppers require, and, as we English texpayers have to contribute towards the expenditure of a quasi court, it will be difficult to persuade the Irish that the Viceroyalty is not a beneficent institution. Moreover, the secretary, under-secretaries, clerks, and the whole of the staff at Dublin Castle, and that very pleasant lodge at Phonix Park, cost considerably more than £100,000 a year. The best thing that could be done would be for Prince Alfred to take the situation. The Irish would then, if his Royal Highness spent one month in the year among them, have as much of a court as the people of London have now.

Speaking of Ireland, there have been some senseless but serious riots in Belfast, originated been broken, some lives lost, and much property destroyed. Even now, though there are more than 6,000 troops and constabulary in Belfast, the disturbances continue, both parties, Protestants and Catholics, using fire arms pretty freely. These bitter sectarian feuds ought to have ended long ago. Dublin was content to have the O'Connell statue erected. What right has Belfast to complain? Some of the papers say that these are not "party" but the city of Saint Johr, en MONDAY, the Robson, the comedian, is dead. This is a public loss. His place will not be easily filled. He made his first appearance in London at the Grecian," City-road—afterwards changed in title to the Eagle Saloon. Some critic atumbled over him there among the rubbish, discerned his merite, and introduced him to Mr. Farren when manager of the Olympic. Robson took when manager of the Olympic. Robson took the town by storm in the "Y-llow Dwarf," in Boots at the Swan," and some burlesques. He could pourtray every phase of human pas-sion, "from grave to gay, from lively to severe," and if his figure had been more dignified he would have excelled as much in the tragic as in the comic line. The London public will not soon find an actor who can provoke so much pathos and risibility.

ought to have ended lang ago. Dublin was content to have the O'Connell statue erected. What right has Belfast to compain? Some of the papers say that these are not "party" but "faction" fights. It seems to us that the opposite is the case. In Ireland a "faction" fight is a quarrel between families, and these feuds are maintsined for centuries, though happily, for many years, they have been very rare. They chiefly take place amongst the Roman Catholies, though a Protestant is sometimes found mixed up in them, when by a mastimonial silisance, he is compelled to go to the "fair" and fight for the honour of the family to which he has been united. A "party" fight, on the other hand, is a conflict between Roman Catholies and Protestants—Ribbonmer and Orangemen. Now the rows at Belfast are to all appearance, a trial of physical force be tween the lower classes of the "Pound," navvies chiefly, and the inhabitants of "Sandy Row," who are chiefly Protestant mechanics. These latter are, for the most part, "Orange," whilst the "Pound" boys are "Green." There is an irreconciliable foud between them. You might as well try to mix iron and clay.
