SLAVERY. Opeofthe most singular cidents o'the British defeat Maiwand, at Afghanistan, just transpired, and if details of it were only known might be shown that a trage has been enacted full of t deepest touches of pathos. Son Sapoys, who were captured an taken to Herat after the batt in which Ayoob Khan defeate General Burrow with hear s'aughter, have by some mea managed to escape from Ayoo citadel and reached the Briti frontier. How they could ha travelled along the line of te tory that stretcehsbetween He and Queta, the capital of t without being murdered or ca tured by the hostile tribes w swarm in the country, is diffic to imagine, but in all probabil they were Mussulman's, and that case they would be able claim some hospitality from t Aighans, who are much mo liable to be affected by the clair of Mohammedanism than th are by the distinctions of natio ality. The story they told t British authorities at Quetta is the effect that four Briti soldiers who were captured Maiwand have been sold in slavery by their captors. T sufferings of these slaves cann be even imagined, because t Afghans are brutal to a degr with respect to aliens whom th have taken in battle. If they sa a life it is only from a whim th they may put it to prolong torture, and these four men a probably now undergoin miseries to which death its would be a comparative relie When Dr Bellew entered Afg anistan twenty years ago, in co nection with an embassy to the Ameer, he met a man who wa pointed out to him as a Britis captive who had been taken the war of 1839 '42. The ma resembled a beast more than Christian baman being. He ha almost forgotten his own lan guage, and the little he had le of it he dared not speak, terrified was he of his Afgha masters. Bellew says the car was singularly pathetic, and it alone the world may gar some idea of the fate of the for white sees who are no reported to be alive in the capit
