Burdock BLOOD BITTERS.

Turns Bad Blood into Rich Red Blood.

This spring you will need something to take away that tired, listless feeling brought on by the system being clogged with impurities which have accumulated during the winter. Burdock Blood Bitters is the remedy you require.

It has no equal as a spring medicine. It has been used by thousands for a quarter of a century with unequalled success.

HERE IS PROOF.

Mrs. J. T. Skine of Shigawake, Que., writes: "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters as a spring medicine for the past four years and don't think there's its equal. When I feel drowsy, tired and have no desire to eat I get a bottle of B.B.B. It purifies the blood and builds up the constitution better than any other remedy."

I would like to recommend it to everybody bothered with a cough or cold. Price 25 Cents.

"I'm afraid the landlady has designs on me—thinks she's going to get me to marry her daughter or something. At dinner last night she gave me the tenderloin instead of the tough end of the steak."

Mrs. Thos. Tracy, Byedale, Ont., writes: "We have used Dr. Low's Pleasant Worm Syrup and find it to be better than any other remedy. It is easy for the children to take and always effectual."

Towne: "Why do you call her an amateur actress? She's on the regular stage."

Crying with Headache.

Mr. A. J. Oimont, the well known storekeeper, Indian Head, N. W. T., writes: "I have given Milburn's Sterling Headache Powders to some of my customers who came into my store almost crying with severe headache and in less than five minutes they went away cured and smiling." Price 10c, and 25c.

One of our readers sends us an amusing story of a borrowing family. The other day one of its members went to a neighbor's house and asked for the loan of a wash-up, and the answer she received was rather perplexing. It was as follows: "No, I can't; the soap is off, the bottom is out, and it's full of water."

Alfred A. Taylor of Margaree says: "One bottle of MINARD'S LINIMENT cured a swelling of the gambler joint, and saved a horse worth $140."

Thos. W. Payne, of Bathurst, saved the life of a valuable horse that the Vet. had given up, with a few bottles of MINARD'S LINIMENT.

Minard's Liniment cures Diphtheria.

"Then you don't believe in high-education for women?"

"Certainly not. I think it's a shame to even teach 'em to read. If a woman couldn't read the bargain advertisements she wouldn't be so unhappy over the lots of things she can't afford to buy."

The Workingman's Garden in France.

A great deal of wholesome article is manifest at present almost everywhere about what the Catholics of France are doing to avert the political and social crash which seems to be impending. Are the great masses of the populace really Catholic? Is anything being done to help the laboring classes in the right direction and to save them from their foes? Are the well-to-do people torpid, or dazed, or despairing? Nothing of all this, at least to the extent that is popularly supposed, for it must be remembered that many efforts are made and many victories scored which are never noted in the public press.

France is a country in which any great organized schemes are being carried out to effect the needed social reforms, and to reach the wage-earner, at least to the same extent as in Germany, or even in Italy. But it must not be forgotten politically the Catholic party is bound hand and foot by the adroit and unscrupulous management of their opponents; that the same right of public assemblage does not exist there as in other countries; that there are laws of repression which can be invoked at any moment, laws which for some things have been allowed to lapse into desuetude when the Government thought it prudent not to interfere, but for which any great Catholic social movement would be immediately enforced, so that it is not fair to judge the French Catholics by the same standard as those in other countries, and it can be safely said that once French enthusiasm gets an outlet it can be counted on for great results. However, some things are being done which the tyrannous laws have not been able to prevent and it may be interesting and instructive to call attention to one movement among very many others that are going on which may possibly seem small where such multitudes have to be flourished, but which because of its peculiar features and because it implies much greater undertakings which will necessarily spring out of it, seems to demand a special notice. It is the organization of what are called "Workingmen's Gardens."

The initiative of the work is due to a woman, Mlle. Hervieu. She had been constantly doing out-ings to a poor family but seemed to be only plunging them deeper by her charity into dependent pauperism. At last she insisted on their doing something for themselves and she began telling them: "For each franc you put into a savings bank I will deposit two for you." A little fund soon accumulated, and with it she bought a small bit of land and told them to cultivate it. The work was repugnant at first for people who had been getting help so easily, but at last they began to take interest in it, made it pay, and are now above the reach of poverty. Some one has said, "Give a man a rock. Let him call it his own, and he will make a garden of it." These people soon verified the truth of the saying.

A Jesuit Father named Volpette heard of it. He was at that time teaching a little class in a town called St. Etienne, and had the custom of bringing his boys' sodalities round the poor quarters of the town to teach them how to exercise the virtue of charity in the practice of alms-giving. They gave a good deal in the way of money but as in the case of Mlle. Hervieu without any visible results. When the lady's plan was somehow or other brought to their attention it came like a flash of light. Father Volpette immediately hired eight or ten acres of ground. Land was cheap there, for St. Etienne is in the mining district and the mining companies had large tracts which they kept free of dwellings so as to forestall any damage suits for the saving in over the excavations. The soil was wretched and stony, but it was another opportunity to test the saying about the rock and the garden. This was in 1895. That year he expended 3500 francs in fences, tools, manure, seed, water pipe, etc. He divided up the land between no less than ninety-eight families in which there were in all 608 persons. It seems infinitesimal, but the French people can make a little go a great way. The first year they raised 4000 francs worth of potatoes and 2000 in vegetables. It gave only sixty francs to each family, but the return was almost double the outlay, and the families were all happy. It was sixty francs added to their little income and it was their own doing. They were not merely hired workers. The next year the expenses were brings the different classes of society in close contact and makes them understand each other. Charitable women are not compelled to be continually holding out their hand to their rich relatives for money to help on their various schemes of benevolence, but find an occupation which is better suited to the woman's nature. They can get down into the families of the poor without the air of patronizing them, a thing which is always resented, but with the kindness of a friend working for the family's material prosperity they can counsel, direct and encourage sustained, and only women helpers can do that. The whole movement has this advantage, that it tends to make the workingmen individual proprietors, and so counteracts one of the chief perils of socialism, as that theory in now exploited. In a word, it is the old Catholic way of recognizing the right of the poor, of recognizing their brotherhood with the other ranks of society, and of endeavoring to make them better off materially as well as spiritually. The influence of the gardens has made itself felt in quarters not thought of by the original projectors of the work. The railway companies are encouraging their flagmen to cultivate little patches of ground near their posts; even the gardener and the custom employees have been swept along in the general current, and it is remarked that the gardens of the custom-house officials at Havre and Dunkerque are models of their kind. The men in garrisons have caught the enthusiasm, not as yet to any great extent in France proper, but in Tunis and Algiers. School masters are teaching their boys to till the ground, and the parish priests are emulating each other in making their kitchen gardens models for their people to imitate. Most interesting of all is that even the fishermen have their bit of land which they cultivate when the bad weather prevents them from venturing out to sea.

Old Aeneas in pagan mythology was said to regain his strength when ever any of his antagonists flung him back to Mother Earth. Getting the French workingman back to the soil is one of the greatest benefits of the new movement. The financial results noted by each individual are not so great as to cause him anything like dizziness, but the moral effects are incalculable. "The greatest profit of our garden," said one good housewife, formerly very much worried but now very happy, "is not in the amount of vegetables we eat as in the number of glasses my husband doesn't drink." "You can't imagine how much evil we don't do," said another, "when we are in our garden." It takes the laborer out of the liquor shops on holidays, in the hours left after toil, and even when he is on strike; it draws the whole family out of their miserable tenement and lets them breathe the fresh air of the country; it furnishes pleasurable and proper work for the children who look upon it as play; and even the old people, who would otherwise mope about the house and grow more and more querulous and disagreeable, have an opportunity of doing some little outside work, in gathering leaves, raking the patches, etc. It goes without saying that the effect on the general health of the workingman and his family is very great in counteracting the tendency to consumption and other maladies likely to be contracted in the confinement and dangerous occupations of mill and factories. Finally it
