

Great Favourites

Huntley & Palmers 'Rich Mixed' is a delicious assortment, including twenty-four carefully selected kinds of their most popular rich biscuits

HUNTLEY & PALMERS 'RICH MIXED' BISCUITS

For social gatherings, for afternoon teas, and whenever a choice but inexpensive assortment is desired, no more delightful biscuits can possibly be offered.

Huntley & Palmers, Ltd., Reading, Eng.

A PRECIOUS INHERITANCE.

CHAPTER I.

The Old House by the Mill.

'So there is one person that has no respect for blood, and that is Death,' said old Hagar to her mistress, when she heard the news. 'He has served us both alike—he has taken my son-in-law first and yours next.'

Frowning haughtily, Madam Conway bade her be silent, telling her at the same time to see that the rooms in the north part of the building were put in perfect order for Mrs. Miller, who would probably come in the next vessel. In sullen silence Hagar withdrew, and for several days worked half reluctantly in the 'north rooms,' as Madam Conway termed a comparatively pleasant airy suite of apartments, with a balcony above, which looked out upon the old mill-dam, and the water-brook pouring over it.

'There'll be big doings when my lady comes,' said Hagar one day to her daughter. 'It'll be Hagar here, and Hagar there, and Hagar everywhere; but I shan't hurry myself. I'm getting too old to wait on a chit like her.'

'Don't talk so, mother,' said Hester. 'Margaret was always kind to me. She is not to blame for being rich, while I am poor.'

'But somebody's to blame,' interrupted old Hagar. 'You was always accounted the handsomest and cleverest of the two, and yet for all you'll be nothing but a drudge to wait on her and the little girl.'

Hester only sighed in reply, while her thoughts went forward to the future, and what it would probably bring her. Hester Warren and Margaret Conway had been children together, and in spite of the difference of their stations they had loved each other dearly; and when at last the weary traveller came, with her pale sad face and mourning garb, none gave her so heartfelt a welcome as Hester; and during the week when, from exhaustion and excitement, she was confined to her bed, it was Hester who nursed her with the utmost care, soothing her to sleep, and then amusing the little Theo, a child of two years.

Hagar, too, softened by her young mistress's sorrow, repented of her harsh words, and watched each night with the invalid, who, once when her mind seemed wandering far back in the past, whispered softly: 'Tell me the Lord's Prayer, dear Hagar, just as you told it to me years ago when I was a little child.'

It was a long time since Hagar had breathed that prayer but at Mrs. Miller's request she commenced it, repeating correctly until she came to the words, 'Give us this day our daily bread,' then she hesitated, and, bending forward, said: 'What

Danderine

Grows hair and we can prove it

Hair Becomes Soft, Fluffy, Lustrous and Beautiful Immediately After a Danderine Hair Cleanse

Get a 25 Cent Bottle Now and Forever Stop Falling Hair, Itching Scalp and Dandruff

A little Danderine now will immediately double the beauty of your hair—No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair taking one small strand at a time. The effect is immediate and amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable lustre, softness and luxuriance, the beauty and shimmer of true hair health.

Try as you will after an application of Danderine, you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or a loose or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few weeks' use when you will actually see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting all over the scalp.

Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its life-producing properties cause the hair to grow abundantly long, strong and beautiful.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and prove to yourself tonight—now—that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it, if you will just try a little Danderine. Real surprise awaits you.

comes next, Miss Margaret? 'Is it, 'Lead us not into temptation?' 'Yes, yes,' whispered the half-unconscious lady. 'Lead us not into temptation,' that's it. Then, as if there were around her in a dim foreboding of the great wrong Hagar was to do, she took her old nurse's hand between her own, and continued: 'Say it often, Hagar—' 'Lead us not into temptation'—you have much need for that prayer.'

A moment more and Margaret Miller slept, while beside her sat Hagar Warren, half shuddering, she knew not why, at the thought of her mistress's words, which seemed to her so much like the spirit of prophecy.

'Why do I need that prayer more than any one else?' she said, at last. 'I have never been tempted more than I could bear—never shall be tempted—and if I am, old Hagar Warren, bad as she is, can resist temptation without that prayer.'

Still, reason as she would, Hagar could not shake off the strange feeling, and as she sat, half dozing, in her chair, with the dim lamplight flickering over her dark face, she fancied that the October wind, sighing so mournfully through the locust trees beneath the window and then dying away in the distance, bore upon its wing, 'Lead us not into temptation. Hagar, you have much need to say that prayer.'

Aye, Hagar Warren, much need, much need!

And Hagar was right, for Hester's sands were nearer run than those of Mrs. Miller. The utmost care might not, perhaps, have saved her, but the latter was not tested, and when the long clock at the head of the stairs struck the hour of midnight, she murmured: 'It is getting dark here, mother—so dark—and I am growing cold. Can it be death?'

'Yes, Hester, 'tis death,' answered Hagar, and her voice was unnaturally calm as she laid her hand on the clammy brow of her daughter.

An hour later, and Madam Conway, who sat dozing in the parlor below, ready for any summons which might come from Margaret's room, was roused by the touch of a cold, hard hand, and Hagar Warren stood before her.

'Come,' she said, 'come with me,' and thinking only of Margaret, Madam Conway arose to follow her. 'Not there—but this way,' said Hagar, as her mistress turned toward Mrs. Miller's door, and grasping firmly the lady's arm, she led to the room where Hester lay dead, with her young baby clasped lovingly to her bosom. 'Look at her and pity me now, if you never did before. She was all I had in the world to love,' said Hagar, passionately.

Madam Conway was not naturally a hard-hearted woman, and she answered gently, 'I do pity you, Hagar, and I did not think Hester was so ill. Why haven't you let me know?'

To this Hagar made no direct reply, and after a few more enquiries Madam Conway left the room, saying she would send up the servants to do whatever was necessary. When it was known through out the house that Hester was dead, much surprise was expressed and a good deal of sympathy manifested for old Hagar, who, with a gloomy brow, hugged to her heart the demon of jealousy, which kept whispering to her of the difference there would be were Margaret to die. It was deemed advisable to keep Hester's death a secret from Mrs. Miller; so, with as little ceremony as possible, the body was buried at the close of the day, in an inclosure which had been set apart as a family burying ground; and when again the night shadows fell Hagar Warren sat in her silent room, brooding over her grief, and looking off at the plain pine cradle, where lay the little motherless child, her grand-daughter. Occasionally, too, her eye wandered toward the mahogany crib, where another infant slept. Perfect quiet seemed necessary for Mrs. Miller, and Madam Conway had ordered her baby to be removed from the ante-chamber where first it had been kept, so that Hagar had the two children in her own room.

(To be continued.)

CHAPTER II.

Hagar's Secret.

The wintry winds were blowing cold and chill around the old stone house, and the deep, untrodden snow lay high piled upon the ground. For many days the gray, leaden clouds had frowned gloomily down upon the earth below, covering it with a thick veil of white. But the storm was over now, with the setting sun it had gone to rest, and the pale moonlight stole softly into the silent chamber, where Madam Conway bent anxiously down to see if but the faintest breath came from the parted lips of her only daughter. There had been born to her that night another grandchild—a little, helpless girl, which now in an adjoining room was Hagar's special care; and Hagar, sitting there with the wee creature upon her lap, and the dread fear at her heart that her young mistress might die, forgot for once to repine at her lot, and did cheerfully whatever was required of her to do.

There was silence in the rooms below—silence in the chambers above—silence everywhere—for the sick woman seemed fast nearing the deep, dark river whose waters move onward but never return.

Almost a week went by, and then, in a room far more humble than that where Margaret Miller lay, another immortal being was given to the world; and, with a softened light in her keen black eyes, old Hagar told her stately mistress, when she met her on the stairs, that she too, was a grandmother.

'You must not on that account neglect Margaret's child,' was Madam Conway's answer, as, with a wave of her hand, she passed on; and this was all she said—not a word of sympathy or congratulation for the peculiar old woman whose heart, so long benumbed, had been roused to a better state of feeling, and who, in the first joy of her newborn happiness, had hurried to her mistress, fancying for the moment that she was almost her equal.

'Don't neglect Margaret's child for that!' How the words rang in her ears as she fled up the narrow stairs and through the dark hall, till the low room was reached where lay the babe for whom Margaret's child was not to be neglected. All the old bitterness had returned, and as hour after hour went by, and Madam Conway came not near, while the physician and the servants looked in for a moment only and then hurried away to the other sick room, where all their services were kept in requisition, she muttered: 'Little would they care if Hester died upon my hands. And she will die, too,' she continued, as, by the fading daylight she saw the pallor deepen on her daughter's face.

Whooping Cough
CROUP ASTHMA COUGHS COLDS
BRONCHITIS CATARRH

Vapo-Resolene

ESTABLISHED 1879

A simple, safe and effective treatment for local trouble, avoiding drugs. Vapo-Resolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough and relieves croup at once. It is a tonic to excite the system, and it is a powerful expectorant. It is a powerful sedative to the inflamed mucous membrane of the throat, and it is a powerful stimulant to the lungs, assisting natural efforts. It is available to mothers with young children.

Send no postal for descriptive booklet. 250

ALL DRUGGISTS

Try Vapo-Resolene. It is a powerful expectorant, and it is a powerful stimulant to the lungs, assisting natural efforts. It is available to mothers with young children.

Send no postal for descriptive booklet. 250

Vapo-Resolene Co., Montreal.

And Hagar was right, for Hester's sands were nearer run than those of Mrs. Miller. The utmost care might not, perhaps, have saved her, but the latter was not tested, and when the long clock at the head of the stairs struck the hour of midnight, she murmured: 'It is getting dark here, mother—so dark—and I am growing cold. Can it be death?'

'Yes, Hester, 'tis death,' answered Hagar, and her voice was unnaturally calm as she laid her hand on the clammy brow of her daughter.

An hour later, and Madam Conway, who sat dozing in the parlor below, ready for any summons which might come from Margaret's room, was roused by the touch of a cold, hard hand, and Hagar Warren stood before her.

'Come,' she said, 'come with me,' and thinking only of Margaret, Madam Conway arose to follow her. 'Not there—but this way,' said Hagar, as her mistress turned toward Mrs. Miller's door, and grasping firmly the lady's arm, she led to the room where Hester lay dead, with her young baby clasped lovingly to her bosom. 'Look at her and pity me now, if you never did before. She was all I had in the world to love,' said Hagar, passionately.

Madam Conway was not naturally a hard-hearted woman, and she answered gently, 'I do pity you, Hagar, and I did not think Hester was so ill. Why haven't you let me know?'

To this Hagar made no direct reply, and after a few more enquiries Madam Conway left the room, saying she would send up the servants to do whatever was necessary. When it was known through out the house that Hester was dead, much surprise was expressed and a good deal of sympathy manifested for old Hagar, who, with a gloomy brow, hugged to her heart the demon of jealousy, which kept whispering to her of the difference there would be were Margaret to die. It was deemed advisable to keep Hester's death a secret from Mrs. Miller; so, with as little ceremony as possible, the body was buried at the close of the day, in an inclosure which had been set apart as a family burying ground; and when again the night shadows fell Hagar Warren sat in her silent room, brooding over her grief, and looking off at the plain pine cradle, where lay the little motherless child, her grand-daughter. Occasionally, too, her eye wandered toward the mahogany crib, where another infant slept. Perfect quiet seemed necessary for Mrs. Miller, and Madam Conway had ordered her baby to be removed from the ante-chamber where first it had been kept, so that Hagar had the two children in her own room.

(To be continued.)

And Hagar was right, for Hester's sands were nearer run than those of Mrs. Miller. The utmost care might not, perhaps, have saved her, but the latter was not tested, and when the long clock at the head of the stairs struck the hour of midnight, she murmured: 'It is getting dark here, mother—so dark—and I am growing cold. Can it be death?'

'Yes, Hester, 'tis death,' answered Hagar, and her voice was unnaturally calm as she laid her hand on the clammy brow of her daughter.

An hour later, and Madam Conway, who sat dozing in the parlor below, ready for any summons which might come from Margaret's room, was roused by the touch of a cold, hard hand, and Hagar Warren stood before her.

'Come,' she said, 'come with me,' and thinking only of Margaret, Madam Conway arose to follow her. 'Not there—but this way,' said Hagar, as her mistress turned toward Mrs. Miller's door, and grasping firmly the lady's arm, she led to the room where Hester lay dead, with her young baby clasped lovingly to her bosom. 'Look at her and pity me now, if you never did before. She was all I had in the world to love,' said Hagar, passionately.

Madam Conway was not naturally a hard-hearted woman, and she answered gently, 'I do pity you, Hagar, and I did not think Hester was so ill. Why haven't you let me know?'

To this Hagar made no direct reply, and after a few more enquiries Madam Conway left the room, saying she would send up the servants to do whatever was necessary. When it was known through out the house that Hester was dead, much surprise was expressed and a good deal of sympathy manifested for old Hagar, who, with a gloomy brow, hugged to her heart the demon of jealousy, which kept whispering to her of the difference there would be were Margaret to die. It was deemed advisable to keep Hester's death a secret from Mrs. Miller; so, with as little ceremony as possible, the body was buried at the close of the day, in an inclosure which had been set apart as a family burying ground; and when again the night shadows fell Hagar Warren sat in her silent room, brooding over her grief, and looking off at the plain pine cradle, where lay the little motherless child, her grand-daughter. Occasionally, too, her eye wandered toward the mahogany crib, where another infant slept. Perfect quiet seemed necessary for Mrs. Miller, and Madam Conway had ordered her baby to be removed from the ante-chamber where first it had been kept, so that Hagar had the two children in her own room.

(To be continued.)

And Hagar was right, for Hester's sands were nearer run than those of Mrs. Miller. The utmost care might not, perhaps, have saved her, but the latter was not tested, and when the long clock at the head of the stairs struck the hour of midnight, she murmured: 'It is getting dark here, mother—so dark—and I am growing cold. Can it be death?'

'Yes, Hester, 'tis death,' answered Hagar, and her voice was unnaturally calm as she laid her hand on the clammy brow of her daughter.

An hour later, and Madam Conway, who sat dozing in the parlor below, ready for any summons which might come from Margaret's room, was roused by the touch of a cold, hard hand, and Hagar Warren stood before her.

'Come,' she said, 'come with me,' and thinking only of Margaret, Madam Conway arose to follow her. 'Not there—but this way,' said Hagar, as her mistress turned toward Mrs. Miller's door, and grasping firmly the lady's arm, she led to the room where Hester lay dead, with her young baby clasped lovingly to her bosom. 'Look at her and pity me now, if you never did before. She was all I had in the world to love,' said Hagar, passionately.

Madam Conway was not naturally a hard-hearted woman, and she answered gently, 'I do pity you, Hagar, and I did not think Hester was so ill. Why haven't you let me know?'

To this Hagar made no direct reply, and after a few more enquiries Madam Conway left the room, saying she would send up the servants to do whatever was necessary. When it was known through out the house that Hester was dead, much surprise was expressed and a good deal of sympathy manifested for old Hagar, who, with a gloomy brow, hugged to her heart the demon of jealousy, which kept whispering to her of the difference there would be were Margaret to die. It was deemed advisable to keep Hester's death a secret from Mrs. Miller; so, with as little ceremony as possible, the body was buried at the close of the day, in an inclosure which had been set apart as a family burying ground; and when again the night shadows fell Hagar Warren sat in her silent room, brooding over her grief, and looking off at the plain pine cradle, where lay the little motherless child, her grand-daughter. Occasionally, too, her eye wandered toward the mahogany crib, where another infant slept. Perfect quiet seemed necessary for Mrs. Miller, and Madam Conway had ordered her baby to be removed from the ante-chamber where first it had been kept, so that Hagar had the two children in her own room.

(To be continued.)

And Hagar was right, for Hester's sands were nearer run than those of Mrs. Miller. The utmost care might not, perhaps, have saved her, but the latter was not tested, and when the long clock at the head of the stairs struck the hour of midnight, she murmured: 'It is getting dark here, mother—so dark—and I am growing cold. Can it be death?'

'Yes, Hester, 'tis death,' answered Hagar, and her voice was unnaturally calm as she laid her hand on the clammy brow of her daughter.

An hour later, and Madam Conway, who sat dozing in the parlor below, ready for any summons which might come from Margaret's room, was roused by the touch of a cold, hard hand, and Hagar Warren stood before her.

'Come,' she said, 'come with me,' and thinking only of Margaret, Madam Conway arose to follow her. 'Not there—but this way,' said Hagar, as her mistress turned toward Mrs. Miller's door, and grasping firmly the lady's arm, she led to the room where Hester lay dead, with her young baby clasped lovingly to her bosom. 'Look at her and pity me now, if you never did before. She was all I had in the world to love,' said Hagar, passionately.

Madam Conway was not naturally a hard-hearted woman, and she answered gently, 'I do pity you, Hagar, and I did not think Hester was so ill. Why haven't you let me know?'

To this Hagar made no direct reply, and after a few more enquiries Madam Conway left the room, saying she would send up the servants to do whatever was necessary. When it was known through out the house that Hester was dead, much surprise was expressed and a good deal of sympathy manifested for old Hagar, who, with a gloomy brow, hugged to her heart the demon of jealousy, which kept whispering to her of the difference there would be were Margaret to die. It was deemed advisable to keep Hester's death a secret from Mrs. Miller; so, with as little ceremony as possible, the body was buried at the close of the day, in an inclosure which had been set apart as a family burying ground; and when again the night shadows fell Hagar Warren sat in her silent room, brooding over her grief, and looking off at the plain pine cradle, where lay the little motherless child, her grand-daughter. Occasionally, too, her eye wandered toward the mahogany crib, where another infant slept. Perfect quiet seemed necessary for Mrs. Miller, and Madam Conway had ordered her baby to be removed from the ante-chamber where first it had been kept, so that Hagar had the two children in her own room.

(To be continued.)

And Hagar was right, for Hester's sands were nearer run than those of Mrs. Miller. The utmost care might not, perhaps, have saved her, but the latter was not tested, and when the long clock at the head of the stairs struck the hour of midnight, she murmured: 'It is getting dark here, mother—so dark—and I am growing cold. Can it be death?'

'Yes, Hester, 'tis death,' answered Hagar, and her voice was unnaturally calm as she laid her hand on the clammy brow of her daughter.

An hour later, and Madam Conway, who sat dozing in the parlor below, ready for any summons which might come from Margaret's room, was roused by the touch of a cold, hard hand, and Hagar Warren stood before her.

'Come,' she said, 'come with me,' and thinking only of Margaret, Madam Conway arose to follow her. 'Not there—but this way,' said Hagar, as her mistress turned toward Mrs. Miller's door, and grasping firmly the lady's arm, she led to the room where Hester lay dead, with her young baby clasped lovingly to her bosom. 'Look at her and pity me now, if you never did before. She was all I had in the world to love,' said Hagar, passionately.

Madam Conway was not naturally a hard-hearted woman, and she answered gently, 'I do pity you, Hagar, and I did not think Hester was so ill. Why haven't you let me know?'

To this Hagar made no direct reply, and after a few more enquiries Madam Conway left the room, saying she would send up the servants to do whatever was necessary. When it was known through out the house that Hester was dead, much surprise was expressed and a good deal of sympathy manifested for old Hagar, who, with a gloomy brow, hugged to her heart the demon of jealousy, which kept whispering to her of the difference there would be were Margaret to die. It was deemed advisable to keep Hester's death a secret from Mrs. Miller; so, with as little ceremony as possible, the body was buried at the close of the day, in an inclosure which had been set apart as a family burying ground; and when again the night shadows fell Hagar Warren sat in her silent room, brooding over her grief, and looking off at the plain pine cradle, where lay the little motherless child, her grand-daughter. Occasionally, too, her eye wandered toward the mahogany crib, where another infant slept. Perfect quiet seemed necessary for Mrs. Miller, and Madam Conway had ordered her baby to be removed from the ante-chamber where first it had been kept, so that Hagar had the two children in her own room.

(To be continued.)

And Hagar was right, for Hester's sands were nearer run than those of Mrs. Miller. The utmost care might not, perhaps, have saved her, but the latter was not tested, and when the long clock at the head of the stairs struck the hour of midnight, she murmured: 'It is getting dark here, mother—so dark—and I am growing cold. Can it be death?'

'Yes, Hester, 'tis death,' answered Hagar, and her voice was unnaturally calm as she laid her hand on the clammy brow of her daughter.

An hour later, and Madam Conway, who sat dozing in the parlor below, ready for any summons which might come from Margaret's room, was roused by the touch of a cold, hard hand, and Hagar Warren stood before her.

'Come,' she said, 'come with me,' and thinking only of Margaret, Madam Conway arose to follow her. 'Not there—but this way,' said Hagar, as her mistress turned toward Mrs. Miller's door, and grasping firmly the lady's arm, she led to the room where Hester lay dead, with her young baby clasped lovingly to her bosom. 'Look at her and pity me now, if you never did before. She was all I had in the world to love,' said Hagar, passionately.

Madam Conway was not naturally a hard-hearted woman, and she answered gently, 'I do pity you, Hagar, and I did not think Hester was so ill. Why haven't you let me know?'

To this Hagar made no direct reply, and after a few more enquiries Madam Conway left the room, saying she would send up the servants to do whatever was necessary. When it was known through out the house that Hester was dead, much surprise was expressed and a good deal of sympathy manifested for old Hagar, who, with a gloomy brow, hugged to her heart the demon of jealousy, which kept whispering to her of the difference there would be were Margaret to die. It was deemed advisable to keep Hester's death a secret from Mrs. Miller; so, with as little ceremony as possible, the body was buried at the close of the day, in an inclosure which had been set apart as a family burying ground; and when again the night shadows fell Hagar Warren sat in her silent room, brooding over her grief, and looking off at the plain pine cradle, where lay the little motherless child, her grand-daughter. Occasionally, too, her eye wandered toward the mahogany crib, where another infant slept. Perfect quiet seemed necessary for Mrs. Miller, and Madam Conway had ordered her baby to be removed from the ante-chamber where first it had been kept, so that Hagar had the two children in her own room.

(To be continued.)

EUROPEAN AGENCY

WHOLESALE agents promptly executed at lowest cash rates for all kinds of British and Continental goods, including: Books and Stationery, Boots, Shoes and Leather, Chemicals and Druggists' Sundries, China, Earthenware and Glassware, Cycles, Motors and Accessories, Drapery, Millinery and Piece Goods, Fancy Goods and Perfumery, Hardware, Machinery and Metals, Jewellery, Plate and Watches, Photographic and Optical Goods, Provisions and Oilsmen's Stores, etc., etc.

Commission 2 1/2 per cent. to 5 per cent. Trade Discounts allowed. Special Quotations on Demand. Sample Cases from £10 upwards. Consignments of Produce Sold on Account.

(Established 1814.)

WILLIAM WILSON & SONS,
Cable Address "ANNUAIRE LONDON"
25 Abchurch Lane, London E. C.

Advertisers Should Remember!

That The Evening Telegram goes into the homes, and is read by all the members of the family circle to a greater extent than any other Newfoundland newspaper. That The Evening Telegram has a much greater value to the advertiser than its circulation figures indicate. That advertising in The Evening Telegram increases sales and profits at less cost than any other medium in St. John's, and its influence with the public is growing day by day, and wise advertisers avail of its columns.

The EVENING TELEGRAM Leads Them All.

THE LONDON DIRECTORY
(Published Annually)

ENABLES traders throughout the World to communicate direct with English MANUFACTURERS & DEALERS in each class of goods. Besides being a complete commercial guide to London and its suburbs, the Directory contains lists of EXPORT MERCHANTS with the goods they ship, and the Colonies and Foreign Markets they supply. STEAMSHIP LINES arranged under the Ports to which they sail, and indicating the approximate sailings.

PROVINCIAL TRADE NOTICES of leading Manufacturers, Merchants, etc., in the principal provincial towns and industrial centres of the United Kingdom.

A copy of the current edition will be forwarded, freight paid, on receipt of Postal Order for 2/6.

Dealers seeking Agencies can advertise their trade cards for £1, or large advertisements from £25.

THE LONDON DIRECTORY Co. Ltd

HIGH-CLASS TOOLS!

THE NEW LITTLE GIANT

For Engineers, Blacksmiths and owners of Motor Boats.

Angel Engineering & Supply Company, Ltd.

FIRE INSURANCE

FIDELITY (FIRE) UNDERWRITERS, of New York.

CAPITAL: $4,500,000.00. LOWEST TARIFF RATES.

Ever Ready to Meet the Largest Losses in the Least Time.

CYRIL J. CAHILL, Agent for Nfld.

Offices: Law Chambers, Duckworth Street.
P. O. Box No. 8 Telephone No. 374. oct12,11,11

Easter Hams and Bacon.

Get your EASTER requirements from us. We are fully stocked and can fill your orders promptly and at attractive prices.

F. McNAMARA, Queen St.

Statutory Notice!

In the Estate of Isaac Kessop, late of St. Jacques, Merchant, Deceased.

Notice is hereby given that all persons having any claim or demand against the estate of Isaac Kessop, late of St. Jacques, Merchant, deceased, are requested to send particulars of the same in writing, duly attested, to Donald M. Browning, Administrator of the Estate of the said Isaac Kessop, or to the undersigned Solicitor for the said Administrator, on or before the 14th day of April, A.D. 1912; after which date the Administrator will proceed to distribute the said Estate, having regard only to claims of which he shall then have had notice.

St. John's, March 11, 1912.

J. A. CLIFT,
Solicitor for Administrator,
Law Chambers, St. John's. m12,11,11

Here and There.

The S. S. Durango leaves Halifax for this port on Friday.

The Prospero was at Belleoram all day yesterday landing a big freight there.

FLORZEL DISCHARGING.—The Florzel commenced discharging at Bowring's premises to-day. Her young harps are averaging 50 lbs.

SNOWING ACROSS COUNTRY.—It is snowing from St. John's to Port aux Basques to-day and the rails which were cleared and the cuts are again filled with snow.

MAN INJURED.—A workman on the S. S. Rosalind, named Power, had his foot crushed between two barrels this forenoon. He had to quit work and go to a doctor for treatment.

SCARLET FEVER.—A case of scarlet fever was reported from Water Street this morning. A lady contracted the disease; she is being treated at home.

THE INGRAHAM BACK.—The Ingraham returned from the Northward last night. She made the run to Westville and back, and made 5 ports of call in 32 hours. She landed 50 tons of old seals in the waters of Bonavista Bay.

PERSONAL NOTES.

Mr. E. White, of the accountant's office, G. P. O., leaves by the Bruce for Western Canada where he goes into the real estate business.

Capt. Couillard leaves by the Rosalind for the St. Lawrence where he takes up piloting work during the summer.

NEW GOODS

Laundry Baskets,
Market Baskets,
Clothes Wringers,
Washing Tubs,
Wash'g Machines,
Butter Churns,
Ice Cream FREEZERS.

Bowring Bros., Limited.

Hardware Department

The Safe-Cabinet

Then you will have a cabinet that does all a wooden file can do plus this most important thing—protects your papers from fire, theft, dust and moisture. Measured by price alone, anyone can afford to buy The Safe-Cabinet. Measured by value, no one can afford to be without it.

FRED. V. CHESMAN, AGT.

JOB PRINTING

Fads

Russian New sleeve short. Velvet and their day. Tunics are street suits. The reign of no means of The lines of undoubtably Striped and fashionable neck in place. The new double or silk takes hat trimming.

The K

But in advance these organs Chase's As old people suffer rearrangements some there. Fortunately about Dr. Chase's and are enabled the kidneys. Mr. Richard Lambton Coville ten years ago Dr. Chase's my back, was or risa was neys were in pills entirely I have used ever the kidneys, and well and head medicine. Dr. Chase's all a dose, 25 ars, or Edman notes.