MINARD'S MINIMENT CURES
BURNS, ETC.

That Mistake in the Count.

The publication of the counts of St. Barbe's election was marked by an extraordinary incident when the count was about two-thirds through. Eight counts were already published, and each count but one, showed a gain for Mr. Clapp. The eighth count gave Mr. Clapp 887 votes and Mr. Mott 630, and therefore showed Mr. Clapp leading by 257 votes. Then appeared what purported to be the ninth count which was put up at each of the three Postal Telegraph Offices on Water Street, giving Mr. Clapp 905 votes and Mr. Mott 897, showing Mr. Clapp leading by only eight votes. The count was most extraordinary, as it showed that Mr. Clapp had increased his vote by eighteen while Mr. Mott's vote had gone up to 267. In other words Mr. Mott had obtained 267 votes out of 285. People could hardly believe their eyes, and repeated inquiries elicited the response that the figures had been confirmed. Naturally, the hopes of the adherents of the People's Party went up with leaps and bounds, while the hopes of the Liberals were dashed to the ground. A quarter of an hour later the count was withdrawn and another substituted for it showing that Mr. Clapp had not lost his lead but had really increased it. The Daily News, this morning, asks for a prompt and thorough investigation. On enquiry by telephone this morning from the Postal Telegraphs, we were told an investigation is being made. But at the time of writing we were unable to obtain the result of it. A clear explanation should be forthcoming for the whole of this service of informing the public as to the results of the counts was in the hands of the Government. The Returning Officer, who was responsible for the counting of the ballots and the Telegraph officials who transmitted the figures are appointees of the Government. It should therefore be no difficult matter to discover the cause of the mistake.

LATER.

This morning we phoned the Colonial Secretary, Hon. J. R. Bennett. He told us he had ordered an investigation, and would let us know the result. Later on, Mr. Bennett told us that the repeating station at Deer Lake had reported that the false figures transmitted to St. John's were those received from Bonne Bay, but from the latter place no explanation had then been received.

Why Nero Tortured Christians.

Historical Facts and Discussion Provoked by the Glorious Photo-Drama "Quo Vadis."

George Kleine's photo-drama "Quo Vadis," opened last night to a large and fashionable audience at the Casino Theatre and is creating a great deal of discussion and comment all over the country. Many readers and students of history take exception to the picture on the ground of fact. However, Mr. George Kleine claims to pictorialize Sienkiewicz's romance rather than history and, whatever deviations from the truth occur, the responsibility lies with the author of the novel. The questions that are most debatable seem to be the cause of the burning of Rome and the persecution of the Christians. In the Kleine photo-drama Nero is held directly responsible for the burning of Rome and when he discovers the effects it has upon the people he tries to shift the blame upon the Christians. Historians differ as to the cause of this particular conflagration, many attributing it to natural accident inasmuch as the City had been partially destroyed upon several occasions before and also because it was liable to very easy destruction on account of its narrow and intricate alleys and the irregularity of its streets. Many claim that it broke out in a business section of the City in which vast quantities of oil and other combustible matter were stored and that because of the vast number of wooden buildings it was easy prey for fire. Some authorities accuse Nero of deliberately firing the City because of his well-known and often-expressed ambition to rebuild it, but whether this is a fact or not is open to debate. Tacitus, the great historian, does not attempt to convey the impression that Nero originated the fire or the rumor that the Christians had started it. Many able critics insist that the course he took in permitting the Christians to assume the responsibility was forced upon him and that he adopted it with reluctance. That he permitted the Christians to be tortured and threw them to the lions is true, but other Roman Emperors followed his example and, curiously enough the best of them were most hostile to the spread of Christianity because they believed that its teaching would result in upsetting the Empire. Nero and all of his predecessors of the line of Caesars were hated by the patriots for upsetting the Republic. However, that his heart and nature were not so black as painted by Sienkiewicz and others is partly proven by the fact that after he died the common people strewed flowers on his grave and were apparently devoted to him, whilst the patrician element did everything to blacken his memory.

"Quo Vadis" as presented by Mr. Kleine, however, is full of so many interesting features that one might discuss them for hours and for pages. Suffice it to say that they are well worth the time of anyone who enjoys the finest that may be obtained in photo-drama.
