A "Portrait."

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

"Well, anyway, she's always good company," defended Molly.

"Is that the best you can say of her?" said the Author. "M a n's Wife."

"I think it's a lot," said Molly, hotly.

"It seems to me more like damning with faint praise," said the A u t h o r - M a n's Wife.

With which do you agree? I'm with Molly. Not because she's right.

"Being good company" hasn't a very heroic sound, but neither has "the habit of looking on the bright side," yet you know how highly Stevenson places that latter gift.

She is Ready For Anything.

I am thinking of a woman who has to a rare degree that gift of being good company. Let me describe her to you, so that you will know just what I mean by the phrase.

In the first place, she is one of those people who is always ready to do things with you. She does not have a headache or some work that she planned to do and will not put off; nor does she think that she will get too tired. She is a person of abounding health which is, to be sure, more her good fortune than her virtue (at least we so rank it nowadays, perhaps we shall think differently some day).

She Has The Great Gift of Mirth.

In the second place, she has an excellent sense of humour. She is always ready to laugh, and she has, moreover, the Magi's gift of being able "to be diverted when other people are annoyed," at inconveniences or small discomforts.

She is an excellent listener. Not just the passive kind, but the kind that stimulates you, makes you wittier and cleverer than you are wont to be.

Yet she is not at all a silent person. She knows everybody in town and can tell you all the latest news,—not malicious gossip,—but all the interesting human chit-chat of the neighbourhood.

She Brings Up Your Favorite Subject.

She has always heard something new that someone has said about you and never fails to repeat it. Also, she knows just what subject you particularly like to talk about and does not oblige you to introduce it for yourself.

She always has a good time wherever she goes because she carries this good-company atmosphere with her, and because she knows how to make a lot out of small pleasures.

This is a portrait of a woman who is good company.

Is it "damning with faint praise" to use that phrase of any one?

Had a ship's anchor fall on my knee and leg, and knee swelled up and for six days I could not move it or get help. I then started to use MINDARD'S LINIMENT and two bottles cured me.

PROSPER FERGUSON.

Everyday Etiquette.

"What is the proper thing to do when one learns that a friend is going abroad?" asked Ethel.

"One should send the friend a steamer letter, a basket of fruit, a box of candy or an appropriate gift," said his sister.

FISHING.

Fishing is a popular form of relaxation which enables tired business men to forget the efforts of the expensive account to swamp the bill receivable. This is because in order to fish successfully one must remove to some spot several miles distant from the incisive voice of the cash register and the blighting presence of the sight draft.

In the infancy of our country, when time was worth not to exceed ten cents on the dollar, fishing was more popular than it is in these days, when a man can hardly find time enough to screw down the grease cups and oil the transmission before starting on another joy ride. As a result, fishing nowadays is largely confined to the leisure class who are able to travel 4,000 miles in a compartment sleeper in order to reach the abode of the snub-nosed pickered and jerk him from his watery shoot with a de-mountable fishpole and a reel which automatically advances the spark.

A popular form of relaxation which enables tired business men to forget the efforts of the expensive account to swamp the bill receivable.

Fishing is a great comfort to men who like to get away occasionally and think about something which is not related to the dollar sign. After a man has been away on a fishing trip for two weeks and has met personally all of the mosquitoes eligible to military service within a radius of two hundred miles, his mind will be entirely detached from the daily cash sales and he will cease wondering if the new stenographer has learned to spell in the English language during his absence.

It requires more ability to fish and produce new business than it does to sell old-time life insurance without rebating the first year's premium. Many a man has started out on a fishing trip fully equipped, from hip boots to spoon hooks, and returned home with nothing but four sunfish and a stone bruise, while half a block down stream some former's boy with a 15-cent pole and a can of grasshoppers was snaring pike in a flat-bottomed scow and a pair of linen pants. This is a monstrosity of nature which has driven many a man to the golf links and the self-playing piano.

Fishing is a great aid to meditation. Hundreds of men take to fishing, because they cannot meditate at home without being interrupted by dress-makers' bills and ragtime music. Women do most of their fishing prior to the wedding day, and are accused of it with great frequency by husbands who forget that their love letters are still in evidence.

Your Boys and Girls.

It is fairly easy to make a little ice chest for the baby's milk this summer as follows. Get an ordinary box large enough to hold an ordinary zinc or tin water-pail. Fasten a lid on this box with hinges and a stout hook or clasp. Set a larger pail in the centre and pack it all around with sawdust. Set a much smaller pail inside the first one, and pack ice between the two pails. Place the bottles holding the milk inside the first pail and cover it tightly.

Line the lid of the box with newspapers, covering them with oilcloth to keep them dry. This keeps out heat and prevents the melting of the ice. The pails can be bought at any five and ten cent store. This home made ice chest finds favor with country mothers in particular. It can be run for five cents a day or less and is a real baby saver.

What a Gas Range Means for You, Mrs. Housekeeper.

The gas range is a muscle saver and a step saver. Think of the many tons of coal you used in that coal range, and how you have had to handle it all twice; first, carrying it up out of the cellar; then, from the kitchen to the ash barrel.

No more soot to wipe away; no more ashes to cart away; no more wood to fetch; no more coal dust; no more smoke and no more reason why the kitchen cannot be kept as clean and as orderly as the parlor. The gas range means just this.

Saves 50 Per Cent of Kitchen Cares.

Half of the labor in the house is caused by dust from the coal range. Every time it smokes, no matter how good the draught may be, clouds of soot rise and settle on the furniture.

It Eliminates Hard Work.

Use a gas range and you will live better, you will play better, and you will work better because the use of the gas range eliminates the drudgery of carrying coal, ashes and the chopping of kindling, as well as the drudgery of cleaning up a lot of dirt and, best of all, for the cook it makes it unnecessary for her to stand over a hot stove from two to three hours a day.

The War's Whirligig.

(From the London Advertiser.)

When the war is over and won, people will be looking at themselves in the glass to see how much they have suffered or changed. When John Bull takes a survey of himself he will be shocked at the extent to which his state has been socialized—national shops, mines, railways, and so on, confiscatory taxes on the rich, and the nationalization of the land. His first thought may be, perhaps, to change all back again. But he will sigh and shake his head, and, with his usual practical judgment, conclude that the old cannot be brought back again. For better or for worse, Great Britain has been changed in a twinkling, and can hardly be ever again the same as it was before. Some years ago H. G. Wells wrote an agreeable romance about a comet meeting and changing the earth, transforming even human nature to something kinder and better. It was a dream of good that Shelley or Tennyson would have enjoyed. Now the real shock of a horrible war has wrought transformations in Great Britain, Russia, and probably, under the surface, in Germany herself, such as could not have been reasonably expected in a long period. Whether they are all good, who can say? But they have come, and certainly for good in every sense. Prohibition, to the point of prohibited liquor advertisements in some of the Provinces, and woman suffrage are two permanent contributions of the war, thus far, to our national life.

Fads and Fashions.

Many of the day frocks are very short.

Light camel's hair color is in favor.

Scarlet shades show a Spanish influence.

Satin and linen is a novel combination.

A new wool material is called sack-cloth.

All-over lace is used for dainty neckwear.

The lace dinner gown is fashionable again.
