Walls of Ancient Tiberias.

Biblical scholars everywhere will be greatly interested in a chance find made in Jerusalem in August of this year by some Jewish workmen who were building a wall for the Palestine Government. In their excavations preparatory to the building they came across ancient walls and columns, and one of their overseers, an intelligent fellow, carried the information at once to Jerusalem. The location of the spot was that he suspected that the ruins of some important Old Testament edifice had been found.

Work was ordered stopped, and the Director of the Department of Antiquities went to the place with members of the Jewish Exploration Society. Preliminary digging was done and a thorough study of the grounds, the investigation convincing the men that they had found the site of the ancient Tiberias, a place which has such great association with Christian and Jewish history. That it is near the modern Tiberias on the Sea of Galilee is, in itself, enough to promise important historical light.

The Palestinian Government granted permission to the Jewish Exploration Society to go ahead immediately, and uncover the ruins. Rapid progress is being made. The excavators have no doubt of the importance of their find and will be able shortly to draw up a plan of the ancient city, as opposed to the present day stronghold of Arabs and Jews. Tiberias, at the present time, is notorious for its feuds. The king of feuds is said by the Arabs to hold his court in Tiberias.

The German Ambassador.

Once more Germany has an ambassador to Great Britain—the first since August, 1914, when war was declared, and the German Ambassador, Carl Prince of Lichnowsky, was sent home. The latter seems to have done his best to maintain peace, but he was deceived up to the very last by the German Government that was at the least trying to hoodwink Great Britain and delay her intervention until the German armies had "hacked" their way through Belgium, and given France a knock-down blow. Lichnowsky has published an account of his conference with Sir Edward (now Viscount) Grey, the British Foreign Secretary at the time, and that account corroborates the statement that Sir Edward and the whole British Government strove up to the very last minute to preserve the peace of the world.

The war came and finally the Allied victory brought it to an end. A treaty of peace was signed, and Great Britain and Germany again resumed commercial and political intercourse. Then Germany sent to London Herr Friedrich Sthamer to look after her interests. At first he was Charge d'Affaires, that is, an acting ambassador, administering the office but without the title or full official rank. From February last until a few days ago that was the position of Herr Sthamer, but he has now been made full ambassador, the first from Germany since Lichnowsky left London shortly after the great war had burst upon the world.

As is the practice with respect to every new ambassador, Herr Sthamer was received at Buckingham Palace by King George.

Herr Sthamer has been accompanied to London by his wife and daughter, and the family is residing at the German Embassy in Carlton House Terrace, London.
