This year Christmas day falls upon a Sunday, and already people are enquiring whether the commemorative holiday is to be kept on Saturday the 24th or on Monday the 26th instant, is being taken for granted that either the one day or the other will be proclaimed as a public holiday. Unless it is so proclaimed by the governor-in-council it cannot of course be kept in banks and public institutions. We do not remember what course was followed when last Christmas fell upon a Sunday; but inasmuch as the day is one for family gathering, many for this purpose being compelled to travel some distance from their ordinary places of occupation, it is to be trusted the government may issue the necessary proclamation, making the Monday following Christmas day a public holiday.

The small boy who laughs is almost in-separable from the ordinary church concert. He is not necessarily a bad boy—he does not come to the concert with any preconceived notion of disturbing the proceedings. "He only laughs because he must." He could no more tell you why he does it than why he breathes. And the worst of it is that he exercises a sort of electric influence on everybody near him. To hear him first giving vent to a small titter with his hand over his mouth, and eyes closed and his nose wrinkled like a withered apple—and then to see him duck his head down, and watch his back shake—and then to hear him explode into a regular guffaw which finally subsides into a weak, helpless giggle—all these things are most dangerous to the equilibrium of any human being of or-
