The Gazette des Hopiteaux, while noticng a case of alleged recovery from hydrophobia, observes that it is often difficult to make the distinction between true hydrophobia, due to the absorption of the rabid virus, and the symptoms of hydrophobis caused by fear of the disease. It cites the case of a woman who died at the hotel Dieu with what seemed to be all the symptoms of the disease, under all the circum stances of the case. Several months be fore, this woman, who was a street vender, fore, this woman, who was select vectory, had been bitten by a dog as she was passing Notre Dame, and went at once and had the wound cauterized at the hotel Dieu. From that time she continued perfectly well, until one day, when she was pushing her barrow before the hotel Dieu, she was recognized by one of the students, who called out to her: "Halloa! you are not dead yet, then! The dog that bit your thigh was downright mad, as they found out at Alfort!" At the very instant this remark was made the poor woman was seized with a violent pharyngeal spasm, and was at once taken indoors, where she died with all the indications of hydrophobia. Alfort!"
