

Brother J. H. Chapman, while a member of '98 Theology, did not graduate, although he did all the work but the taking of his diploma from the hand of the Chancellor. Fearful lest the charm of a pastorate might detain him from future study, which he wished to pursue, he decided not to graduate, but wait until another year. Brother Chapman was ever a diligent student. He is the Sankey of '98 and was always ready to give a helping hand whenever a demand for aid along the musical line came to him.

Brother A. R. Park, the minstrel of '98, who joined us after a year's absence from college through sickness, was one of the most congenial and spiritual members of our class. There is every prospect that he will be a very successful servant of his Master in the field of the Gospel ministry.

Brother H. G. Kennedy was without doubt the quietest of our number. But the character of the work he did was such as only much thought and painstaking effort could produce. He excelled in homiletics—his plans always being capital and more than once meriting the praise of the professor and the admiration of his fellow-students. Although heavily burdened with pastoral and other duties, he was always a regular attendant at lectures and able to take an intelligent part in the discussions of the class-room. We are certain that time will show that our brother Kennedy is a "workman who needeth not to be ashamed."

Bro. J. R. Webb for two years ably filled the office of secretary of class '98, was one of the most enthusiastic of her number. He came into the ministry after splendid business training and all through his course was an earnest student. He has many qualities which fit him for the life-work he has chosen. We are glad to hear encouraging reports of his work in Montreal. We expect good things from this bright and devoted member of '98 Theology.

In conclusion, let me say that the professors have each given us a distinct message, and in the discharge of our pastoral duties they will ever be with us, and their ministry during the few years of our life at college will be to us a constant benediction. As we think of Chancellor Wallace we will ever find an impulse to be punctual, methodical, and to think high thoughts;
