

Their untiring effort, never-failing kindness and self-denial, together with a true appreciation of students' wants, have caused all living in the College to regard it as a real home. As a mark of their esteem, the students, on March 15th, presented them with a handsome tea-service and clock, the value of which was upwards of $80. Mr. Craig, on behalf of the students, accompanied the gift with a neat address, to which Mr. Fullerton made a suitable reply.

CLOSING EXERCISES.

MEASURED by the ceaseless work and worry that always precedes it, the closing day of college should be the most pleasant and refreshing of the session. Such Wednesday, the 4th, proved to be, in spite of the fact that many were leaving the Halls not to return, and were severing most intimate and valued friendships. The novel arrangements for closing the year seemed to please everybody, and showed that the acts of the College Senate are influenced less by a restless desire of change than by the resolve to make steady progress.

The closing lecture of past years, delivered at the most inconvenient hour in the day, has been abolished, and instead, we had this year, two meetings of quite another kind. The first was held in Convocation Hall, at four o'clock p.m. The faculty, senate and students, arrayed in their academicals, proceeded in procession to the Hall, where the diplomas were granted, degrees conferred, and the results of the examinations declared. Fifteen students were graduated, each receiving a hearty burst of applause from his fellow-students as his diploma was handed to him.

The list of diplomas, scholarships, and honors is as follows:—
