

Greeley and his Old Foreman.

A conversation between Thomas Rooker, the old foreman of the New York Tribune, and Horace Greeley, the last time the latter was in the Tribune office, is given in the Troy Press, and that paper says it has never before been printed. Mr. Greeley's denial of the "Crumbs of Comfort" article had been twice suppressed, and the old man climbed the stairs to the composing room to see Rooker about it. The latter was sitting at his desk as he heard Mr. Greeley coming, and he knew the cause of the visit. He rose as Mr. Greeley approached him, and, offering him his hand, said, "Mr. Greeley, I am very glad to see you."

Mr. Greeley said, "Tom, how is it that that I ordered to be put under the editorial head has been left out twice?"

Mr. Rooker grasped Mr. Greeley's hand tighter, and replied, "Mr. Greeley, I have received orders to-day positively from the stockholders to no longer recognize you as editor-in-chief. I am very sorry, Mr. Greeley; it was a terrible blow to me after such a long service in the Tribune office under your management."

Mr. Greeley, still holding Mr. Rooker's hand, said, "Tom, is this my reward? Good-by, Tom; I shall never darken the door of the editorial room of the Tribune again."

This was on the 8th of November, and Mr. Greeley died two weeks later, a broken-hearted man. The Sun has given a fac-simile of the article that was "killed." "We imagine," concludes the Press, "that the Sun obtained the original document (if it is original) from Mr. Rooker, who undoubtedly preserved it, and who, on account of the recent strike, has, we believe, severed his connection with the Tribune, and consequently feels under no obligation to keep its secrets."

Whether Mr. Rooker has or has not severed his connection with the Tribune, it is known that he is absent from his post and has been ever since the strike.
